

Prince comes home with 'the People's Princess'

The Prince of Wales with the Princess's sisters, Lady Sarah McCorquodale and Lady Jane Fellowes, at the Pitié Salpêtrière hospital in Paris. Behind them are President and Mme Chirac

Palace considers full state funeral as the world mourns

By CHARLES BREMNER AND STEPHEN FARRELL IN PARIS AND ALAN HAMILTON AND PHILIP WEBSTER IN LONDON

A SOMBRE Prince of Wales flew home from Paris with the body of his former wife Diana, Princess of Wales, last night to prepare for official mourning and a possible state funeral.

The Prince was met at RAF Northolt by the Prime Minister — who had earlier spoken of his utter devastation at the death of the "People's Princess" — and then returned to Balmoral to comfort his sons.

Thousands of mourners surrounded the Paris hospital where the 36-year-old Princess died early yesterday after a car crash which also killed her companion Dodi Fayed and their French chauffeur. Thousands more gathered outside Buckingham and Kensington Palaces to leave flowers by the railings, as political leaders across the globe paid tribute to one of the world's best-known and most-admired women.

The Prince had flown to Paris from Balmoral accompanied by the Princess's two elder sisters, Lady Jane Fellowes and Lady Sarah McCorquodale. At the Pitié Salpêtrière hospital, where the entrance was piled high with flowers, the Prince was greeted by President Chirac. The two men shook hands and went inside.

The Princess and Dodi Fayed: their car was doing up to 120 mph when it crashed

The Prince and the Princess's sisters were in the hospital for just under half an hour, spending a few minutes alone with the coffin in a first-floor room of the casualty unit before meeting four surgeons and four nurses who had tried to save her. The body was carried from the hospital by four pallbearers, the coffin draped in a Royal Standard, before being placed in a hearse and driven to the airport.

Buckingham Palace is expected to announce details of the funeral today, and is considering calls for a full state funeral, normally reserved only for heads of state. The Palace was involved in discussions with the Princess's family and Downing Street was also consulted, although sources said it was a matter for the Palace and the family. There were indications last night that there would be a state funeral, but arrangements may be made for a private interment to be attended only by the Princess's family.

News of the princess's death stunned a Britain awakening to its Sunday breakfast. Radio and television stations scrapped their schedules and substituted continuous news programmes, and even radio stations which normally pump out a staple diet of rock and pop switched to sombre music. Sporting fixtures were postponed.

Downing Street has already decided on a number of measures as a mark of respect. These include a suspension of campaigning in the Scottish and Welsh devolution polls, and the declaration of a temporary political truce. Last night there was a possibility that the Scottish referendum could be delayed if it was felt to be too close to the funeral. That might necessitate a recall of Parliament, since the dates were fixed by legislation.

In the meantime, there were calls for new privacy laws to protect people in public life from unwarranted intrusion, and for newspaper proprietors to order their publications to stop paying for photographs of the kind that were being sought by a pack of paparazzi said to be pursuing the Princess's car. But ministers made plain that there would be no rush into legislation, and Tony Blair's preference for self-regulation is expected to be maintained. It was pointed out that the rough French privacy laws had been powerless to prevent the tragedy happening on French soil.

French police spent all day yesterday questioning seven freelance photographers, six French and one of Macedonian origin, who had been following the Princess's Mercedes when it hurtled into a concrete barrier in a tunnel on the Right Bank Expressway near the river Seine. Police sources said they expected a criminal investigation to be opened, possibly over charges of leaving the scene of an accident.

The fatal crash happened just after midnight London time, as the Princess and Mr Fayed were being driven from dinner at the Ritz Hotel, owned by Mr Fayed's father, Mohamed al Fayed. Surgeons tried for more than two hours to save the Princess, who had suffered massive internal injuries, but she was pronounced dead at 4 am.

The Prince, who was on holiday at Balmoral with the Queen and other members of the Royal Family, was woken by a telephone call informing him of the accident. When a further call confirmed that the Princess had died, he woke his sons Prince William and Prince Harry, and broke the news to them. Mr Blair, who had been told of the accident by the British Embassy in Paris, was among the first to telephone Balmoral to offer condolences.

As Mr Blair went to church in his Sedgefield constituency yesterday, he described Diana as the People's Princess, and said that that was how she would stay in the hearts and memories of the British people forever.

Buckingham Palace yesterday issued a statement saying: "The Queen and the Prince of Wales are deeply shocked and distressed by this terrible news."

Earl Spencer, the Princess's brother, minced no words in blaming the media for his sister's death. From his home in Cape Town, he said that every editor and proprietor who had paid for intrusive and exploitative photographs of the princess, encouraging ruthless and greedy individuals to risk everything in pursuit of her, had blood on their hands.

Despite the appalling news,

Pallbearers carry the Princess's coffin draped with the Royal Standard at Northolt the Royal Family went to morning service as usual at Crathie Kirk outside the Balmoral gates. Princes William and Harry, outwardly calm, filed into the small granite church along with their father, the Queen and Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother.

At lunchtime the Prince of Wales drove himself to Aberdeen airport to board a BAe 146 aircraft of the Royal

Continued on page 2 col 1

INSIDE

Death of the Princess	2-23	Home news	29-32
Nigella Lawson	23	Overseas news	33
Patrick Jephson	23	Business news	35-37
Simon Jenkins	24	Arts	38
Libby Purves	24	Sport	40-54, 56
William Rees-Mogg	24	Chess & bridge	42
Leading article	25	TV & radio	54, 55
Letters	25	Crosswords	28, 56
Obituary	27	Weather	28

Timetable of events

Saturday, 3:00pm:

The Princess and Dodi Fayed arrive at Le Bourget airport, Paris, on a private jet after a week's holiday, cruising in the Mediterranean. They had cut short the holiday to escape the Italian paparazzi.

5:30pm:

The French paparazzi learn about the celebrated couple's arrival in Paris. They begin gathering outside the hotel and stake out the Fayed flat off the Champs Elysées.

8:30pm:

Photographers spot the couple shopping on the Champs Elysées.

11:00pm:

The couple arrive at the hotel for dinner where a gang of 40 photographers has assembled.

12:15am:

They attempt to leave undetected by going out of the hotel through a rear entrance in Rue Cambon which is not used by hotel guests. They clamber into the back of a waiting dark blue Mercedes 600SEL. A second car, which acts as a decoy, drives off in the opposite direction. Both cars are followed by the photographers.

12:16am:

The Princess and Mr Fayed begin their last fateful journey together driving west at high speed on the expressway alongside the River Seine. They are in the rear of the car. A chauffeur and British born Ritz security guard are in the front.

12:20am:

They are pursued by up to seven photographers on motorcycles and in cars as they head, at reported speeds of up to 100mph, en route for a private townhouse in western Paris where they plan to spend the night before returning to Britain later in the day.

12:25am:

The Mercedes enters a tunnel alongside the River Seine under the Place de l'Alma, in Paris's eighth district. The car goes out of control, collides with a wall, Dodi Fayed and the driver were killed instantly.

12:27am:

An eye witness telephones the police with news of the car crash.

12:38am:

The French emergency services arrive at the accident scene where Mr Fayed is pronounced dead. Doctors attempt to revive the Princess.

12:40am:

The police inform the British Embassy that the Princess has been involved in a crash.

12:45am:

The news is broken to the Prince of Wales in a telephone call from a British diplomat in Paris. The Prince is holidaying with the Royal Family at Balmoral.

12:50am:

Mohamed Al Fayed, the owner of Harrods, is telephoned at his country estate to be told his son has been involved in a serious crash.

01:10am:

Mr Al Fayed takes a second call from the British diplomat at the hospital. He is told that Dodi is dead.

01:50am:

The Princess is lifted from the wreckage. The gravity of her injuries is not clear. Her heart has stopped beating.

02:00am:

Tony Blair is telephoned in his Sedgefield constituency to be told about the accident.

02:00am:

The Princess arrives at La Pitié Salpêtrière hospital, the biggest in Paris, with massive chest injuries and haemorrhaging.

02:05am:

Sir Michael Jay, the British ambassador in Paris, rushes to the hospital immediately on being informed of the accident by the French authorities.

Death scene haunted by a sense of unreality

By CHARLES BREMNER, ADAM SAGE AND PAT PRENTICE

ON A sunny Sunday, one day before France's return to post-holiday work, a sense of unreality pervaded Paris as radio and television broadcast special reports and hundreds of citizens gathered outside the Left Bank hospital and visited the scene of the accident. Others waited at the Quai des Orfèvres, the headquarters of the criminal police, on the bank of the Seine.

First reports from witnesses described a dash in which the black limousine, the biggest Mercedes made and a type favoured by heads of state, tried to shake off photographers who had followed it from the Ritz, on the Place Vendôme. Photographers had trailed the Princess and Dodi Fayed since soon after the pair had landed at Le Bourget airport on a Fayed aircraft earlier in the afternoon. The couple had left the Ritz for Mr Fayed's house in Paris's sixteenth district at about a quarter past midnight, driven by a security official from the Ritz and accompanied by one of the Fayed bodyguards.

They had changed cars from a Range Rover in an apparent attempt to shake off the pack of about 40 photographers dogging their movements. Marcela Cavazos, 24, who was walking past the Ritz, said she saw a convoy of cars, led by Mr Fayed's Range Rover, leaving in an apparent decoy manoeuvre. "Then someone on a motorbike roared up and said to some photographers, 'she's left from the side entrance. Let's go,'" Señora Cavazos, who works at the Mexican Embassy in London, said.

PARIS

A photographer, who asked not to be named, said: "Half of us followed the Range Rover, and the rest followed the Mercedes. But it was going so fast that only those with the best motorcycles could keep up with it."

Apparently pursued by motorcycles, the Mercedes accelerated to what police estimated to be about 90 mph on the straight leading from the Place de la Concorde. At high speed, the driver appeared to have lost control as the car entered a bend at the entrance to the underpass under the Alma bridge, the police said. The car smashed headlong into a pillar, stoving in its long bonnet, apparently forcing the engine into the passenger compartment. The two-ton vehicle then slammed into the walls of the underpass. Passing drivers alerted the police at 27 minutes after midnight.

Mr Fayed, sitting in the back with the Princess, was killed instantly, along with the driver, ambulance officials said. Gary Dean, 38, an interior designer from London, said he saw the car seconds before it crashed as it entered the tunnel, travelling, he believed at about 100 mph. "I thought to myself, this car is going too fast for safety. It hurtled past me. After it entered the tunnel I heard a crash followed by a series of thuds. I suppose where it hit the pillars."

Mr Dean said he did not see any photographers on the car's tail. But by the time police had arrived, five minutes later, there was a "melée" of photographers around it.

Police found photographers at the scene of the crash and detained seven, some of whom are freelance. Others are employed by news agencies. They also took in four other witnesses for questioning. Angry passers-by attacked one photographer who was taking picture of the mangled car.

Police were reported to be investigating the possibility that the driver might have been distracted by the presence of photographers in a vehicle ahead of the Fayed car. Local officers said it was inconceivable that a car could have kept on the road travelling into the curving underpass at such high speed. The dangerous stretch of road has been the scene of at least two fatal accidents in recent years.

As first aid and five units started trying to cut the occupants free from the vehicle, the French Government was alerted to their identity. The British Embassy was contacted. Alerted in England, Mohamed Al Fayed left for Paris.

It took 90 minutes for the firemen to cut through the roof of the limousine and extract the Princess and the bodyguard. She was found to have head injuries and to be bleeding heavily from the chest. A resuscitation unit tried on the spot to massage her failing heart into life. After 30 minutes, she was taken at about two am to the Pitié Salpêtrière hospital on the Left Bank, where a team led by Dr Bruno Riou, head of the intensive care unit, fought in vain to save her life.

"Her chest cavity was urgently opened up, revealing a significant wound to her left pulmonary vein," Dr Riou

Lady Jane Fellowes, left, and Lady Sarah McCorquodale, sisters of the Princess, leaving the hospital in Paris after going to collect the body

Bodyguard was 'Dodi's shadow'

By DES BURKINSHAW

THE only survivor of the crash was a former British soldier and Gulf War veteran now employed as part of the Fayed family's security team.

Trevor Jones was known as "Dodi's shadow" and was a former member of the close protection team of the Royal Military Police who protect British VIPs and diplomats all over the world. His immediate family were at his bedside at the Pitié Salpêtrière hospital last night, where he was said to have moderate head and lung injuries that were not life threatening.

He was understood to have seen active service in Northern Ireland and the Gulf War and to have escaped from Kuwait as the Iraqis invaded. A former colleague said last night: "He was Dodi's shadow, part of his personal team. Trevor is a good lad, good at his job." Mohamed Al Fayed and his family are protected by teams of security men recruited from the SAS, the Parachute Regiment, the Royal Marines and the Royal Military Police. All have seen active service with the British Army in many parts of the world.

THE SURVIVOR

including Northern Ireland, Colombia, the Falklands and the Gulf. "They all know the sound of gunfire and what to do if there is trouble," a former team member said. "Tragically in this situation there was nothing Trevor could do to protect his boss. However he is the only witness and, hopefully, will be able to tell the police what happened."

said. "Despite a closure of the wound and an external and internal cardiac massage lasting two hours, no effective circulation could be re-established and death was noted at 4am."

By the time of her death, a caravan of satellite trucks and a forest of television cameras had begun assembling outside the white-fronted hospital. By dawn, with an army of police in attendance, the first mourners had begun leaving flowers by the marble pillar carrying the hospital's nameplate.

While French television and radio began transmitting a day of special programmes on the Princess, Lionel Jospin, the French Prime Minister, arrived to pay his respects with Bernadette Chirac, the wife of the President. M Jospin, who flew back from La Rochelle, said he had been profoundly saddened that "this beautiful, young woman, loved by the people, and whose every act and gesture was scrutinised, should end her life tragically in France."

Groups of mourners and sightseers began appearing outside the British Embassy, on the rue du Faubourg Saint-Honoré, and others gathered at the entrance to the Alma underpass, which had been reopened to traffic soon after dawn. By mid-morning, there were more than 100 people at the scene of the accident, among them Daniel Kleine, 27, a French financial consultant, who arrived carrying a single red rose.

"This is my homage to a wonderful person," he said as he suspended his flower above the tunnel.

The crowd outside the hospital rose to well over 1,000 and the flowers piled up at the makeshift shrine at the gate. The satellite dishes had swollen to a sea. Indignation towards the press was fuelled by harsh French radio and television commentary on the low tactics of the "British gutter press". France Inter, the government station, said British tabloid talk of reform was like "a rubbish bin deciding to clean itself."

"You are a bunch of murderers," shouted a woman on the Boulevard de l'Hôpital as a gaggle of Fleet Street photographers sat in the sunshine at a café table.

All day commentators deplored the destiny which had led "Lady Di" as she is still known in France, to meet her fate in their country. Her summer aventure with le milliardaire égyptien had become public when she appeared with him on the family yacht at St Tropez.

Many French saw their country as a refuge for Diana, where she could enjoy peace from the British media, just as the Duke of Windsor had chosen Paris as his exile home.

Mr Fayed suffered from none of the controversy that his father suffers in British eyes. The father's recent refurbishment of the Duke of Windsor's house on the Bois de Boulogne had recently won acclaim. "The tragic princess has been united in death with her lover," said a radio commentator. "How terrible it should have happened in France."

Valéry Giscard d'Estaing, the former President, struck the most poetic note. The life of the princess "had followed a dazzling trajectory, such as the kind that one sometimes sees in the sky, from the innocence of childhood to coronation, world celebrity, to death in the absurd carnage of an accident."

President Chirac ordered that France would give its most royal send-off to the Princess. A company of the Republican Guard in full dress regalia was on hand to provide military honours when the Princess of Wales and the Princess's two sisters arrived at the hospital early in the evening to accompany her body by car to Villacoublay airport and then back to London.

The French President was seen to wipe away a tear as the cortege left the hospital. Elisabeth Guigou, the Minister of Justice, announced that a formal criminal investigation had been opened.

CAUSE OF DEATH

THE Princess died as a result of a torn pulmonary vein (Dr Thomas Summerville writes). The pulmonary veins, two from the right and three from the left, are large vessels carrying the oxygenated blood from the lungs to the heart.

The extreme blood loss that would follow a lacerated vein, the pulmonary congestion and difficulty in respiration — together with the loss of an adequate supply of oxygenated blood to the heart and all the other essential organs — caused cardiac arrest, the immediate cause of death.

Despite the heroic and prolonged efforts of the surgeons at La Pitié Salpêtrière hospital, who had already dealt with the haemorrhage from the torn pulmonary vein, circulation could not be restarted and they had to admit defeat and declare that their patient had died.

The accident might have had a happier ending if the initial story that the Princess had been able to walk from the wreckage of her car had been correct.

As it is, it seems that the Princess was knocked unconscious immediately and that it took some time to rescue her from the vehicle. If the Princess had reached the surgeons earlier they could have immediately staunching the bleeding from the pulmonary vein, the heart might not have arrested, and she would have had a chance of making a recovery.

Prince Charles flies home with the People's Princess

Continued from page 1

Squadron to Paris. The aircraft landed at Villacoublay, a military airfield 30 minutes southwest of Paris, and the party was driven at high speed in a convoy of ten vehicles with police outriders.

President Chirac arrived at the hospital fifteen minutes before them with his wife Bernadette, and the junior health minister Bernard Kouchner and Frederic Grasset, head of protocol, were also there in advance. Twelve soldiers of the Gardie Républicaine lined up either side of the entrance to the concrete and glass casualty building, the Pavillon Gaston Crodière.

Nurses, ancillary staff and patients, stood along the narrow avenue beneath two lines of plane trees, while others leant over staircase railings and looked out of fourth-floor windows.

A small number of British and French journalists were led discreetly through back streets to a rear entrance where they were vetted and admitted by soldiers as nervous officials, sensitive to strong public feelings about journalists in the wake of the Princess's death, ushered the party in quickly. Even so, the journalists were greeted with howls of anger and shouts of "assassins" from the crowd. The mood quickly calmed as the medical staff appeared, led by the anaesthetist Professor Bruno Riou, and Professor Alain Pavie, the thoracic and cardiac surgeon. Professor Pierre Coriat, head of the hospital anaesthetist unit, and Professor Jean Pierre Benazet, the emergency orthopaedic trauma surgeon, were also there.

The Prince of Wales arrived at 4.40pm in a green Jaguar with a Royal pennant. In the car with him were the British Ambassador to Paris Sir Michael Jay, the Prince's bodyguard and an embassy driver. In the second car were Lady Jane and Lady Sarah with Lady Jay.

The Prince of Wales, wearing a blue suit and black tie, was greeted by M Chirac and walked quickly up the few steps into the building followed by the Princess's sisters, a military attaché and officials. The Prince, apparently in a state of shock, swallowed hard as he went in. In all, they spent 26 minutes inside, going straight to the first floor where the coffin was. Aides insisted the body had already been formally identified by an embassy official and their decision to view the body was a personal choice.

At 5.06pm the Princess of Wales's body was carried out slowly, preceded by the Rev Martin Draper, of St George's Anglican Cathedral in Paris, and two officials.

The four pallbearers were followed by two men each carrying bouquets of lilies and gladioli. The Prince of Wales emerged from the building after his former wife's coffin had been put into the steel blue Rivage hearse on which the blinds had been drawn. Silence descended on the crowd as the Prince strode out, looking neither to right nor left, towards his Jaguar. The cavalcade then moved off in a hail of sirens and flashing lights. When it had gone, officials bundled a black-draped coffin trolley and personal effects into a dark car and followed the convoy.

Few present remained unmoved by the sight of the Princess of Wales's last journey home. One Elysée official, who had been up since the early hours making arrangements with members of the Prince and Mr Fayed's households, shook his head and muttered "Quel jour, quelle horreur".

French authorities last night blamed the crash on high speed, and had no hesitation in linking it to the photographers pursuing the Princess's car on motorcycles. Some unconfirmed reports said that the black Mercedes 600 had been travelling at 120 mph when it hit a concrete barrier inside the tunnel. One witness said that it had taken 15 minutes for emergency services to arrive, and during that time the one police officer on the scene made no attempt to rescue the car's occupants. By last night the authorities had still not named the French driver of the car, who was killed outright along with Mr Fayed. The only survivor was Trevor Rhys-Jones, a bodyguard employed by Mohamed Al-Fayed, who was said to be in a critical condition.

Bernard Darteville, a lawyer acting for Mr Al-Fayed, told a television interviewer that he would bring a civil suit as soon as a judicial inquiry into the deaths had opened. He did not say at whom the suit would be targeted, but he strongly criticised photographers for their recent hounding of the couple.

Timetable of events

02.10am: The bodyguard, the only survivor of the crash, is cut free from the wreckage and taken to hospital.

02.15am: A number of French photographers are detained at the scene by police.

02.20am: The Princess suffers a cardiac arrest. An emergency thoracotomy reveals a major wound on the left pulmonary vein.

02.20am: President Clinton and his wife Hillary are told by a military aide about the crash while they are attending a party at a private residence at Martha's Vineyard where they are on holiday.

02.25am: Doctors in the emergency unit perform a heart massage by hand on the Princess, first external then internal, in a desperate attempt to save her. The battle to keep her alive continues for two hours.

03.45am: Mohamed Al Fayed lands at the same airport his son had arrived at hours earlier with the Princess.

04.00am: The French ambassador telephones Balmoral and informs the Queen's private secretary that Diana has died. The Prime Minister is informed. The Prince of Wales wakes up his sons William and Harry to tell them that their mother has died in a car crash.

04.05am: Raine, Countess of Chamberlain, the stepmother of the Princess, rings Mr Al Fayed on his car telephone to tell him that the Princess has died. Mr Al Fayed is entering the hospital grounds when the call came through.

04.21am: The first public inkling in Britain that something serious has happened. The Press Association puts out a snap saying that the plane of Robin Cook, the Foreign Secretary, has been grounded at Manila airport, just before take off, as he prepares to make a statement.

04.30am: Wreckage of the Mercedes is removed from tunnel.

04.41am: Press Association breaks the momentous news to the world with the Newflash: "Diana, Princess of Wales, has died, according to British sources, the Press Association learned this morning."

04.57am: The official news that the Princess has died is announced at the hospital by French Interior Minister Jean-Pierre Chevènement.

05.05am: A distressed Robin Cook confirms her death at Manila military airport in the Philippines.

05.09am: Buckingham Palace announces that the Queen and the Prince of Wales are "deeply shocked and distressed by this terrible news".

05.21am: The Prime Minister issues a statement which says: "I am utterly devastated. The whole of our country, all of us, will be in a state of shock and mourning."

05.23am: Mohamed Al Fayed issues a statement which says that the deaths are "appalling and quite needless". He adds: "The world has lost a Princess who is simply irreplaceable."

06.00am: The BBC cancels its usual schedules and devotes all radio and television coverage to the Princess. The national anthem is played on the half hour.

09.00am: Harrods announces it will open for business today.

By Andrew Pierce

Only grief remains at tunnel of death

Few marks remain of crash but visitors see a life cut short, writes Pat Prentice

ONLY a thin line of brown sand spread about 40 yards beside a narrow left-hand kerb marked the spot where the Princess was fatally injured in an orange-lit underpass — apparently witnessed, in death as in life, by the paparazzi who had chronicled her brief, traumatic existence. Three faint chalk lines, two circular and one curved, were visible next to the narrow pavement. But there were no obvious skid marks or damage to the road surface. The concrete pillars in the 100-yard-long underpass were not noticeably damaged, nor were the small white tiles lining the right-hand side wall.

From early in the morning, small groups of people began gathering. Their mood was more disbelief than sadness. They spoke of pity for a woman they felt had not had the chance of a proper life.

In the warm late summer sunshine of Paris, the road had already been reopened and cars were passing through both sides of the underpass. Beside the grief were cars trying to avoid the mourners and the sound of hooters. "From a distance, at the creperie entrance, a solitary policeman waited."

"The four-lane tunnel — two lanes in each direction — is narrow, and drivers describe it as very fast. The Princess's car would have approached from a longer tunnel, over a short rise."

Small sprays of flowers, mostly with no messages, were being placed on the narrow central pavement beside the central balustrades. The shadowy daylight was augmented by the intermittent orange lighting.

Greg Day, 45, a telecommunications worker, and his wife, Creina, 37, had been told the news by relatives they had telephoned at home in Melbourne. "People are so sorry. They are crying, she was very popular in Australia," Mr Day said. "She never had a chance to have a personal life. Now her boys have lost their mother. My wife is very sad."

Mrs Day said: "All the negative things came out in her short life. Now, just as she was beginning to turn it round, this happens. She had done so much good."

"She tried to help others in

WITNESS

every way she could. She was a little bit lost, that's all. They wanted the scandals to end and they were doing. Maybe she would have found happiness."

Tina Salussoliha, 43, a personal assistant from Richmond, Surrey, heard the news while on holiday. "I just felt I had to come here myself," she said. "What had she done to deserve it? She always did so much for others."

Echoing the disbelief among some onlookers, she said: "This seems not a very fast road for something to happen to such a degree."

There was also the stirring of the kind of surreal speculation that will inevitably come to surround the Princess's death. Bernard Bidow, 36, gained some nods and some disapproving shakes of the head when he said: "I am most surprised that this could happen; that the car could have been almost destroyed, at whatever speed."

"My idea, from the very beginning of this, is that maybe there were figures in perfidious Albion who thought her an embarrassment. Now that is replaced by tragedy."

There was no sympathy in Paris yesterday for the seven detained paparazzi — the photographers known in the French trade as the Rats. Outside the police headquarters at the Quai des Orfèvres, a single policeman carrying a radio and pistol kept a world press pack at bay.

Only once was there any drama — when a smartly dressed man in his mid-twenties angrily approached journalists and shouted: "Photographers! Assassins! twice before being moved on."

Inside the imposing police station on the Ile de la Cité, near Notre Dame, the six French and one Macedonian paparazzi had gone from being the hunters to the hunted, their trophies of film impounded. On the day when they were probably in possession of their biggest story they were able to do nothing.

Nathalie, a film camerawoman outside the police station, said: "These people live on the razor edge of the law. Diana lived with her responsibilities, they must shoulder theirs."

Police removing the wreckage of the Mercedes car in which the Princess and Dodi Fayed were fatally injured from the underpass in Paris

Police dealt with crowds not victims, says tourist

By Daniel McGrory

AN AMERICAN tourist who was one of the first to reach the Princess of Wales's car described "the unimaginable delay" before anyone tried to free her from the wrecked Mercedes.

Stanley Culbreath said: "It was at least 15 minutes before an ambulance arrived and the one policeman who was there made no attempt to help anyone who was in that wreck. He could not have known who was in that vehicle but, no matter who it was, I was shocked that no one lifted a finger to do something."

"Instead the policeman seemed more concerned stopping a photographer who was trying to take a picture and he silence" in the tunnel in the aftermath of the crash. "There were no cries for help, no screams, nothing. No one was moving inside the car. You could see figures slumped in the back to the side but it was impossible to identify it was Diana."

Mr Culbreath had just left the Eiffel Tower after a late-night sightseeing trip with two business companions, Clarence Williams and Mike Williams, when they drove to the entrance of the tunnel.

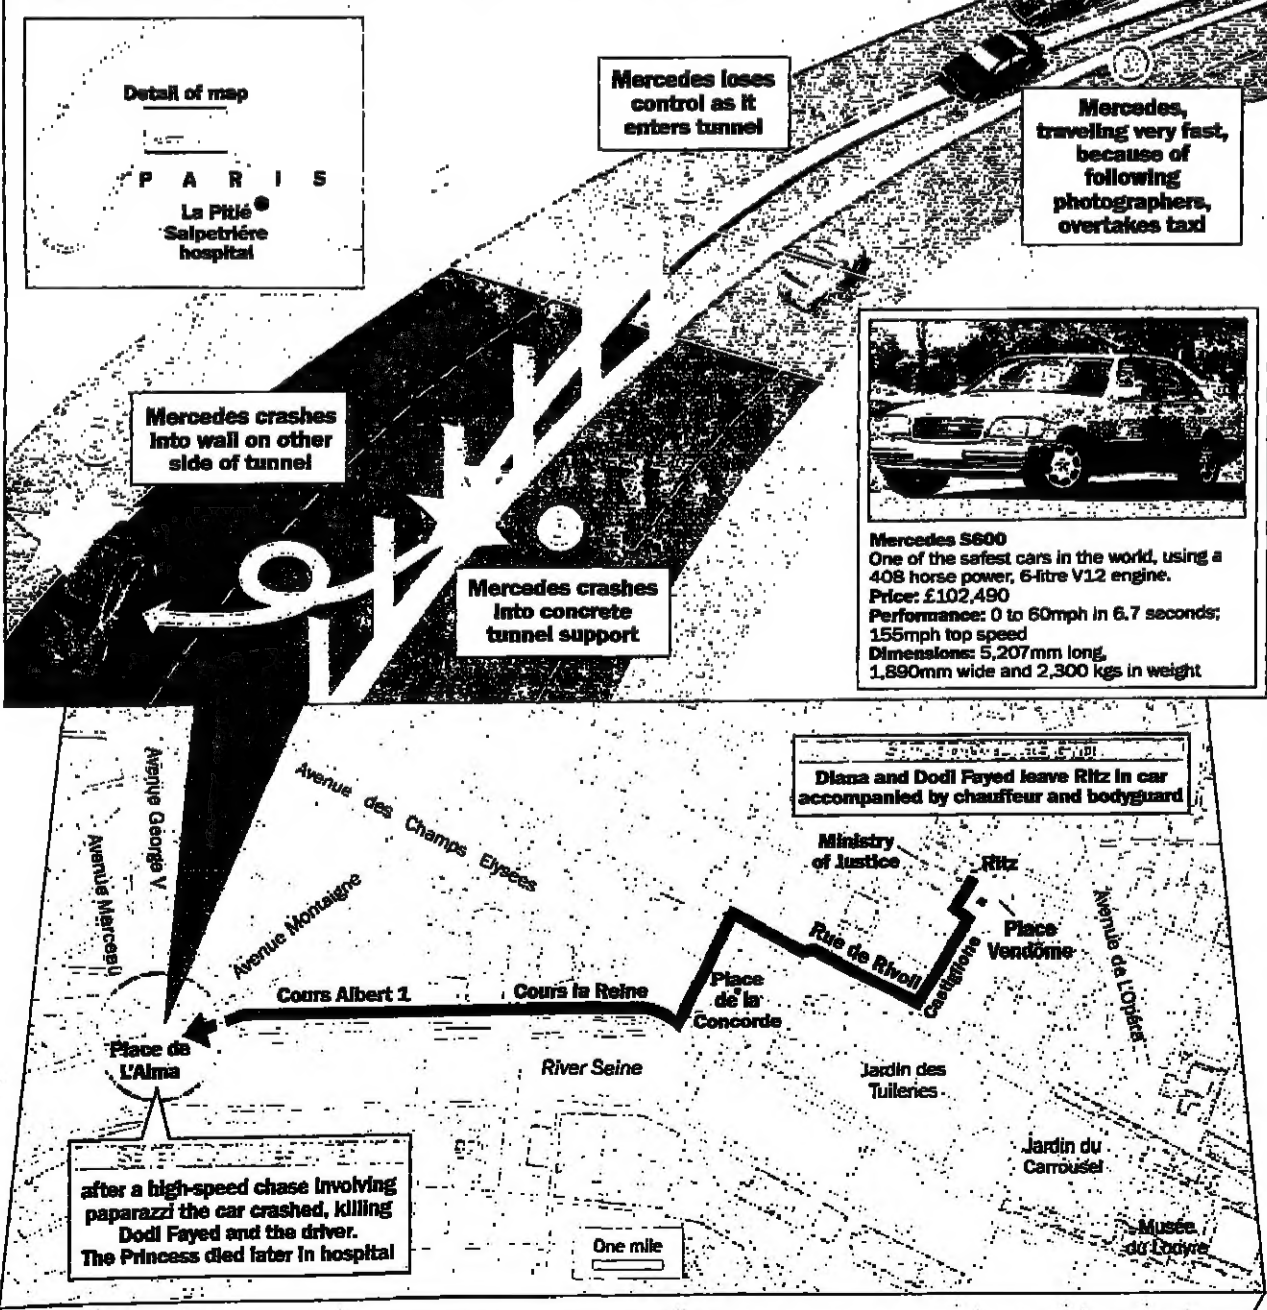

"I could hear the drone of a car horn, like a dead horn, as though someone had just left their hand on it. About half-way down the tunnel, where there is a dip and a curve, we saw the car, or what was left of it. It was so badly damaged you could not tell the make of it at first."

"The vehicle was pointing in the same direction as us but was on the opposite carriageway so it had to have spun completely around. I could see the driver. His head was jammed against the steering wheel and I suppose the car horn. You could not make out his face for the blood. He wasn't moving."

"The car was tilted with one side a bit off the ground, jammed against the wall. The front passenger door was thrown open and I could see another man. His face was pushed into the airbag and again there was blood all over him. His feet were out of the door and were just touching the floor."

"It looked as if he was trying to get out but couldn't. He

HOW THE CRASH COULD HAVE HAPPENED

Speed meant there could be no protection in the crash

By Kevin Eason, Motoring Editor

NO ROAD car is likely to have been able to protect a person from the impact of hitting a concrete pillar at up to 100mph.

The Mercedes-Benz S-class is one of the safest models in the world, but experts at the company's headquarters in Stuttgart said yesterday that the car's apparent speed meant the crash would be "catastrophic". Wolfgang Inhester, for the company, said: "No matter what car the passengers would have been riding in, there was no chance of survival."

Witnesses say the Fayed limousine was doing between 60 and 100mph along the narrow dual carriageway before it crashed in the dimly-lit tunnel. That would be up to 60mph more than current tests to pass European safety legislation.

Racing drivers in cars costing up to £1 million — sitting in specially designed cockpits made from advanced carbon-fibre materials and strapped to their seats by five-point seat belts across their chests, waists and legs — are injured in crashes at that speed, hitting cushioning tyre walls.

A deep V-shaped gouge in the nose of the S600 indicates that the car hit the narrow concrete pillar head-on. Both the driver and passenger airbags — designed to inflate within six-hundredths of a second of impact — were deployed, which might have helped to save the Princess's security officer, who was in the right front passenger seat.

The Princess was sitting in the right rear seat with Dodi

Fayed alongside her. They would have had only the protection of their three-point seatbelts. Even then, the sheer force of impact could have trapped the couple in their belts, possibly causing internal injuries as they were thrown forward. If they were not wearing belts, both would have been hurled into the backs of the front seats.

Mercedes spends £1 million a day on safety research at its laboratories in Stuttgart. However, all the safety devices built into an S600 would be useless if the driver simply lost control and little or no time to react.

THE CAR

One of the unanswered questions last night was whether the driver of the car was trained for a high-speed chase through city streets. Driving a limousine at high speed demands the precision of a racing driver allied to an understanding of how a car weighing two tonnes or more reacts when it is has to make tight turns and stop sharply.

At the Mercedes school, drivers have to show that they can control an S-class, one of the biggest cars on the road, as they flick from side to side and across lanes at 100mph. But trainees learn their skills on tracks away from obstacles. Performing those same manoeuvres on darkened streets — where there are security officers, who was in the right front passenger seat.

The Princess was sitting in the right rear seat with Dodi

Carpet of flowers stretches from palaces at dawn of mourning

Thousands went to share their tears and anger as the news began to spread, reports

Adam Fresco

THOUSANDS OF mourners gathered at Buckingham and Kensington palaces from early morning as people learnt of the tragedy in Paris. In wide-spread displays of grief, men and women wept openly while others sat quietly on the ground with their head in their hands. All had a look of disbelief etched on their faces.

People returning home from nightclubs and parties and those on their way to work were among the first to stop at the gates of Buckingham Palace to pay their respects. One carload of students arrived, each carrying a single red rose to place by the railings.

Hundreds of bunches of flowers were placed by mourners, some just small children, too young to understand the enormity of the occasion, as well as candles and poems.

A bouquet made up of dozens of white lilies and red roses, accompanied by a picture of a young female landmine victim, was delivered with the message: "On behalf of landmine victims throughout the world. Your dedication and courage will never be forgotten."

As the media presence grew, some of the crowd began to blame them for the death of the Princess. At her London home, a passing bus driver shouted: "Leave her alone, she's dead now."

The large crowd clapped in unison when one angry onlooker began a tirade against waiting photographers, shouting: "The press killed her. You killed her, you bunch of vultures." At Buckingham Palace the same sentiments were expressed.

Rena Braich, 26, a student from London, said: "I can't understand what the photographers were hoping to get. A picture of two people in a dark car can't be worth all this misery."

Rose Palmer, 57, a London housewife, said: "The photographers are certainly to blame. They followed her everywhere, every day. What makes me angry is that they didn't seem to care what Charles got up to."

By the afternoon, thousands of people stretched into Kensington High Street as the kneedeep carpet of flowers stretched ever longer around Kensington Palace. Inscriptions read: "Born a lady, became a princess, died a saint", "Princess of hearts: you

The people's memorial: children laying flowers at the entrance to Buckingham Palace. Some of the crowd of mourners shouted at photographers will live on in all of our hearts" and "The nation has thrown away a jewel more precious than its whole empire".

Kerry Taylor, 18, a bulimia sufferer, was given special permission to leave her eating disorders clinic in London this morning to join the groups of other mourners outside the Palace.

She said: "Diana was my heroine. I hadn't told anyone about my eating disorders until she confessed to hers. She was an inspiration. After that I was able to tell my family and friends. It made it all much easier to bear. I never met her but I will miss her terribly."

Mike Sorokoput, 35, an air steward from Sydney, said: "As soon as I heard the news on the radio I came down here. Diana was in everybody's life. Britain has lost the jewel in the crown of its Royal Family. It is as though the fairy tale has finally come to an end."

Ian Leckie, 25, from Glasgow, placed a solitary bunch of lilies at the gateway of Kensington Palace.

He said: "I am shocked, it is not the way anyone should die. I've never done anything like this before but I'm very upset by this news. It's a tragedy."

Lesley Bruce-Hay, 39, a landscape gardener, had driven from Surrey with her nine-year-old daughter Bianca. Openly crying, she said: "Bianca always liked Diana, so I thought it was important to bring her here this morning."

"A lot of people were critical of Diana, but I always admired her. She had a lot to cope with and she coped with it with strength. It's such a cruel waste."

With moist eyes, the thousands of people approached the gates of Buckingham Palace and knelt down to place their offerings. By the time they stood up, many were in tears.

"Coming here makes it worse, but we had to come. We had to. We'll never see her again. My God, it's unbelievable," said Helen Clements, 61, from Glasgow. "My cousin woke me up at 3 this morning and we stayed up all night. All we could do was cry and make cups of tea."

The carpet of flowers stretched 20 yards away from the gates as people wandered around, telling each other they could not believe what had happened. Teresa Law had been woken at 7am by her husband Simon who saw the news on television. "I thought he can't be joking, he wouldn't joke about something like this."

Together with their three daughters aged 8, 6, and 4, they left their home at Eppingham, Guildford, and drove straight to Buckingham Palace. "They are still wondering what it's all about. Only the oldest one understands," said Mrs Law.

Tourists who had come for the changing of the guard quickly hushed their boisterous children, leaving only a low murmur.

John Goide, 55, a warehouse assistant from Peckham, said: "I was a little kid when King George VI died. I was down here with my mum. It was a freezing cold day and I remember the same crowds, except most people were in black."

Joy Bone, a retired City worker from Romford, had been looking forward to yesterday for several weeks. "My son was born 36 years ago today. He is now the same age as Diana."

"God, it's so young. I was going to be so happy today."

Statesmen who shared the limelight face hard decisions

By Peter Riddell

TONY BLAIR and other party leaders yesterday expressed with dignity and emotion the national sense of shock and grief. But, as they would be the first to acknowledge, they were, for once, on the sidelines.

The Princess died, as she lived, a unique, global figure. For all the attempts to draw a wider symbolic significance from the appalling tragedy of her death, there are few such implications — with one big exception.

POLITICS

However much she had recently become involved in political controversy, the Princess was above conventional politics.

She was a star, as the stunned reaction throughout the world yesterday showed. Her death was more like that of other global stars such as Marilyn Monroe or Princess Grace of Monaco, than, say, the assassination of President Kennedy.

The drama will continue to fascinate and engross, but is likely to change little. The Princess had a big impact on public life, as well as on the popular imagination.

Unlike most other members of the Royal Family, she was able to highlight the plight of outsiders.

She changed the public view

Tony Blair paying tribute after attending church with his family yesterday in his Sedgefield constituency of Aids sufferers when she shook hands with one a decade ago and, similarly, changed world views when she met the victims of landmines in Angola and Bosnia.

This work was obviously political but, despite last week's fuss about her alleged remarks to Le Monde, it was not partisan.

Politicians had ambivalent views of her. They liked her and recognised her ability to attract public attention to any cause that she took up, and thereby to do much good. Her glamour guaranteed media coverage, which politicians also enjoyed sharing.

But they were also wary of her involvement in issues of controversy and these fears increased after her divorce and the easing of some of the constraints of court life although still a member of the Royal Family. The fuss this summer over her landmines campaign showed the limits on what she could do.

Apart from the sense of personal loss and grief — and of her personal style and contribution to various charities — the main impact of the way she died will be on the debate over press intrusion. Successive governments have been reluctant to legislate, but the matter may be taken out of legislators' hands.

Senior judges have already said that rights of privacy might develop case by case under the common law if Parliament fails to act. The scope for such rulings will increase following the proposed incorporation of the European Convention on Human Rights into British law.

Politicians know there is little they can say, or do, over the next few days. On such occasions of national grief, they can echo but not create the public mood. But after the mourning is over, they will face tricky decisions on privacy.

Privacy options, page 15

FA puts stop to matches for first time in 45 years

By John Goodbody
SPORTS NEWS CORRESPONDENT

PROFESSIONAL football reacted quickly to the death of the Princess of Wales by postponing all matches scheduled to be played yesterday.

It was the first time since King George VI died in 1952 that the authorities had called off fixtures because of the death of anyone outside the national game.

England's World Cup qualifier with Moldova at Wembley on Wednesday week could also be in doubt if the match clashes with the funeral or any official day of mourning.

In rugby union, the two Premiership games were postponed but almost all the rugby league and Sunday League cricket fixtures went ahead, with the teams observing a minute's or two minutes' silence before the start.

SPORT

The exception was the Northamptonshire game against Durham, which was put off for a week out of respect to the 9th Earl Spencer, brother of the Princess, who is a patron of Northamptonshire County Cricket Club.

Among the postponements in football was Liverpool's Premiership game against Newcastle, which had attracted a sellout crowd of 35,000 to Anfield and was to have been shown live on BSkyB.

The decision was made at 11am after discussions between the Football Association and the Premier League with the Prime Minister's office. Peter Leaver, the league's chief executive, said: "The world of football joins with the nation in expressing our deepest sympathy to all those who knew and loved her."

Liverpool, one of teams involved in the Hillsborough disaster in 1989, added: "The club shares entirely the nation's grief following the death earlier today of the Princess."

The Football League

George VI

postponed the game between Crewe and Port Vale, while the Scottish League called off both Kilmarnock against Motherwell yesterday and Celtic versus Rangers, which had been scheduled to be played today.

The last time that football put off matches after a death outside the game was when King George VI died on Wednesday, February 6, 1952. Although Saturday's fixtures took place as usual, the FA postponed all the matches in the greater London area the following week, when the monarch's funeral took place.

The British Horse Racing Board has yet to decide what action to take on the day of the Princess's funeral but meetings at Hamilton and Hexham will go ahead today, preceded by a minute's silence.

Michael Jackson cancelled a pop concert before 60,000 people in Ostend, Belgium, yesterday because he did not want to perform after hearing of the Princess's sudden death. (Reuters)

The official tribute: a Union Jack flies at half mast over the Houses of Parliament

Prince William and Prince Harry sitting on either side of the Prince of Wales as they leave Crathie parish church after Sunday morning service. They had been accompanied to church by the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh

No mention of accident as Princes join church service

By NICHOLAS WATT

LOOKING sombre but remarkably composed, Prince William and his younger brother, Prince Harry, left Balmoral Castle yesterday to attend church with other members of the Royal Family.

Hours after being awoken by the Prince of Wales to be told of the death of their mother, the young Princes were driven slowly to the small parish church in Crathie where the Royal Family worship during their summer break.

Dressed in suits and wearing black ties, the Princes sat on either side of their father in the back of a black limousine as they swept up a narrow tree-lined avenue to the simple church across the River Dee. The Prince of Wales, who wore a Highland kilt and a black tie, stared straight ahead, looking red-faced with blood-shot eyes.

The Princes were accompanied to the 11.30am service by the Queen, the Duke of Edinburgh, Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother, the Duke of York, and their cousin, Peter Phillips. The Queen wore a simple black dress with a black hat, while the Duke of Edinburgh wore a kilt and black tie.

As she was driven to the church, the Queen smiled and waved to a crowd of local wellwishers and scores of tourists who stood in silence. The Rev Robert Sloan, the Church of Scotland minister at Crathie, greeted the Royal Family outside the church where wellwishers had earlier left two simple bouquets of flowers.

THE FAMILY

During the hour-long service, which was attended by about 100 local parishioners, no mention was made of the death of Diana, Princess of Wales. Mr Sloan said: "Everybody in the world knew what had happened. Our business was to conduct a normal service of worship."

However, parishioners wept as they sang the hymn God Is Love His Mercy Brightens, and prayers were said for the Royal Family. Mr Sloan said in prayer: "We remember all those who at this time of need to know Your presence. All those whose lives are darkened by tragedy and grief who need to know more than human comfort and friendship."

"We pray for our Queen and her family, the Prince of Wales, Prince William and Prince Harry. May they be assured of Your love, may they be assured of our love."

The service was conducted by the Rev Adrian Varwell, a visiting Church of Scotland minister from Benbecula, the Outer Hebrides, who continued with his prepared sermon. The two young Princes, who sat in a section of the church reserved for the Royal Family under a bust of Queen Victoria, listened as Mr Varwell illustrated his thoughts with Billy Connolly jokes and told of the unsettling experience of moving house. At one point the minister held up a plastic bucket with a hole which he used to feed his goats and sheep. Mr Varwell said that the water which flows out of the hole is akin to people who waste God's love.

At the end of the service Mr Sloan, who was dressed in the red robes of the Queen's domestic chaplain, was overcome with emotion as the congregation stood for the national anthem. Standing in front of the congregation he held his head in his hands for a few brief moments.

After the service the minister paid tribute to the courage of the young Princes for attending the service. Mr Sloan said: "They were remarkable. They were very good indeed, despite what must have been going through their minds and their hearts. They were very sombre and very upset."

The minister said he found the singing of the national anthem a particularly poignant moment. "When you sing the national anthem in the presence of the Queen it does move you. The words mean a lot to the folk in the kirk. On an occasion like this it is much more personal than on an ordinary Sunday."

The Queen Mother is driven away from church

Mr Sloan described the Princess of Wales as a member of "our family" and said he hoped that the service would help the Royal Family to cope with their grief. He said: "Whatever happens in the world there is still a tomorrow. The past can be put past and can be forgotten. There is a new life. From a Christian point of view we believe that life is in Christ and in the Christian faith. We hope they took this away with them." Soon after returning to Balmoral the Prince of Wales drove to Aberdeen airport from where he flew to Paris. Shops in the Balmoral area shut yesterday afternoon as a sign of respect. Locals were joined in their grief by tourists who paid their respects outside the church. Olga Grainger, from Carlisle, who has come to Balmoral for the past nine years to see the Queen, said: "It is the last thing that should happen to a lovely young woman like that. It is terrible for the boys."

Martin Ellis, 21, an English student living in Luxembourg, said that the best tribute would be to introduce an immediate worldwide ban on the sale of landmines. He said: "It would leave a real mark if the world banned landmines." Crowds at Balmoral noticed that the Royal Standard on the estate was not being flown at half-mast. A Buckingham Palace spokesman explained: "The Royal Standard is the flag of the Sovereign and is never flown at half-mast, even when the monarch dies. As the heir to the throne immediately takes over in the event of a sovereign's dying, the flag is never flown at half-mast."

Wellwishers last night left floral tributes at the entrance to Balmoral Castle. One card said: "To our Queen of hearts. May you finally have found peace and happiness. You will never be replaced." Another alluded to the Princess's reported dislike of Balmoral. The card read: "You may never have loved Scotland, Diana. But Scotland loved you."

Wellwishers last night left floral tributes at the entrance to Balmoral Castle. One card said: "To our Queen of hearts. May you finally have found peace and happiness. You will never be replaced."

Another alluded to the Princess's reported dislike of Balmoral. The card read: "You may never have loved Scotland, Diana. But Scotland loved you."

Masses after mother talks to priests

By SHIRLEY ENGLISH

THE Princess's mother, Frances Shand Kydd, was being comforted by friends at her home on the Isle of Seil, near Oban, yesterday.

Mrs Shand Kydd, 61, a devout Catholic, was informed of her daughter's death in the early hours. A police guard was placed outside her home. Candles were lit at her parish church, St Columba's Cathedral, Oban, and at Mrs Shand Kydd's request two special Masses were offered.

Father Sean MacAulay, the parish priest, said: "I put the television on and heard that Diana was injured. I phoned Frances at 4am, and Frances told me that Diana had been killed."

"She had her friends with her who had driven down during the night. A mother losing her child is a terrible thing. The death of a child knows no words we can say that will ever comfort a parent. It can only be compared to Our Lady losing her child Jesus." Father MacAulay added: "Frances is a very resilient woman with a strong faith and she'll need those qualities."

Mrs Shand Kydd, who left the Princess's father the late Earl Spencer in 1969, was not at Mass yesterday, but Father Paul McAlinden told worshippers: "Today we gather as a community in mourning for Diana, Princess of Wales. We pray particularly for her two young sons and of course for her mother, Frances, a parishioner in our community. It was her mother's wish that this Mass be offered for the repose of the soul of Diana."

Mrs Shand Kydd: not at Mass yesterday

Children may need warning about effects of grief

Teenagers suffer badly and 'stiff upper lip' delays recovery, says Dr Thomas Stuttford

HOWEVER the Prince of Wales broke the news to his sons, his words will inevitably have started the grief response. Grief is not haphazard: it follows a well-recognised pattern although its extent and length is influenced by the way in which it can be expressed and by the temperament of the bereaved.

The Prince of Wales would have been conscious that following the divorce a year ago, this is the second time recently that he has had to talk to his children about an upheaval in their domestic life. Recurrent disasters are potentially more damaging than a single incident, however serious.

The Prince of Wales will almost certainly be aware that grief is likely to be much more intense when death is sudden and unexpected, and that it possibly affects adolescent children — who are inevitably insecure — more intensely than other age groups.

The Prince may not know that there is evidence that the way he explains the normal grief response to his children is all-important, as it is essential that they are not taken by surprise by the emotion that it evokes.

A full explanation of grief in all its forms, and the chance to discuss its manifestations, may affect the future equilibrium of children. There is evidence that the "stiff upper lip" which the Prince of Wales will have to show in public, and that his sons will be expected to display at school, can delay a return to normal life.

Standard grief goes through three stages.

Initially the bereaved feel numb. They find it impossible to comprehend the full consequences of what has happened, and thus may appear so emotionally unaffected by the death as to seem callous. Psychiatrists call this period the stage of denial, and it can quite normally last for a week or two.

The second stage includes all the signs and symptoms traditionally associated with depression. During this period, the bereaved person is preoccupied by memories of the person who has died, talks incessantly about them, and may even have auditory hallucinations, feeling certain of hearing the voice of the dead person.

The bereaved sufferer has a poor appetite, weight loss, waves of sadness and insomnia accompanied by night-time tears. They withdraw from their social life, losing interest in many of the activities they previously enjoyed.

Children may have less well-defined depressive symptoms, but may be generally difficult, rebellious and apparently idle. For an adult to be depressed for six months is difficult, but in the case of someone still at school, this can represent two lost terms, and can lead to problems for the rest of the schooldays.

During the second stage, the bereaved can frequently feel a sense of guilt. Usually, this is expressed by a statement which starts: "If only I..." The reason for the guilt may be totally unreasonable and may seem absurd to someone else.

Although many feel guilt in the second stage of grief, others may feel anger. This may be directed at the person who has died: "How could she leave me with all these problems?"

Other people attribute blame for the death to a third party's incompetence or foolishness, and become set on some form of retribution.

Within four or five months, in the normal grief response, the depressed mood lightens and the bereaved patients begin to resume their normal lives. They should be back on a normal mental plane within six months, able to cope with the office, factory or school.

The grief response is considered abnormal if it lasts for more than six to eight months, or if the symptoms are abnormally severe. Even after this time, however, it is not unusual for it to return on the occasion of an anniversary. And it can sometimes happen that the grieving process becomes stuck in one of the stages.

The feeling of numbness and unreality may last for many weeks or, for instance, anger induced by the second stage may remain for many years, so that the misery engendered by the death is never overcome.

Provided that the grief remains within the normal limits, the treatment is to allow the person to talk, express their feelings and discuss their doubts. Some psychiatrists have found that the advice of professional counsellors is not always as helpful as supposed.

The way in which bereavement is dealt with inevitably determines the long-term happiness and future stability of those who suffer from it. In the case of Prince William, it may even decide the future of the monarchy.

Mother Teresa tells of her grief

FROM CHRISTOPHER THOMAS
IN DELHI

MOTHER TERESA said the Princess was "like an ordinary housewife", conveying her belief that she was a simple person, and a good wife and mother.

"She helped me to help the poor and that's the most beautiful thing," she said, revealing that the Princess had given money to her Missionaries of Charity order.

The order emphasises simplicity and poverty for its members, and the Princess, who knew the Albanian-born nun for five years, seemed to empathise with its work. She embraced Aids babies and stroked the stumps of lepers, gestures that warmed Mother Teresa to her and made her a sensation on the Indian sub-continent. They never, however, delved into personal issues or the Princess's private life.

"I am very sorry to hear about the sudden death of Princess Diana," Mother Teresa said, seated in a wheelchair. "All the sisters and I are praying for her and all the members of her family to know God's speed and peace and comfort in this moment."

A sign in chalk has been erected at the order's headquarters in Calcutta, declaring: "Please pray for the repose of the soul of Princess Diana."

The two last met in June in New York. "She was very much concerned about the poor and her attitude towards the poor was good," Mother Teresa said. "That is why she came close to me. She came to Calcutta. She was taken to Shibu Bhavan [an orphanage] where we have children for adoption. We are fighting abortion with adoption. She was anxious to do something for the poor."

She said that in conversation they never dwelt on the subject of the Princess's personal life. "We never talked about her divorce. Most of the time we talked about how to love God and ask God to help us to love the poor. She was a very good wife and good mother of beautiful children."

The Princess visited the sub-continent several times, meeting Pathan tribal chiefs on the Afghan border in Pakistan,

Prayers said in sub-continent for 'good wife' who had turned her attention to concern for aiding the poor holding slum babies in Calcutta, falling foul of hardline mullahs in Peshawar, hugging cancer patients in Lahore, and stroking the stumps of lepers in Kathmandu, the Nepalese capital, and Calcutta.

She posed alone at the Taj Mahal, a monument to love, when her marriage was unravelling. In conversation in the British High Commissioner's residence in Kathmandu, she told me of her intense dislike of the ceremonial side of her job and her joy at the international impact of sweeping Aids babies into her arms.

Benazir Bhutto, the former Pakistani Prime Minister, with whom the Princess got on well, expressed sorrow. "The death is indeed tragic. It is sad that such a promising and endearing person, whose life was dedicated to humanitarian causes, should have been cut down so abruptly," she said. Nawaz Sharif, the Pakistani Prime Minister, expressed sadness, especially for the Princess's children. Under Kumar Gujral, the Indian Prime Minister, said he was shocked. In a message to the Prince of Wales, Mr Gujral declared: "We pray for the peace of the departed soul. We in India knew her as a warm and compassionate person and recall her visit to India with Your Royal Highness. Her humanitarian concern and activities won her worldwide admiration. I pray to God to give strength to Your Royal Highness and to Prince William and Prince Harry to bear up to this trial."

Imran Khan, the former Pakistan cricket captain, said the Princess had "achieved unprecedented heights in the service of mankind". His wife Jemima, daughter of the late financier, Sir James Goldsmith, spoke of her horror at the Princess's death. She was a friend of the Princess and played host to her on her last visit to Pakistan, when she toured a charity cancer hospital opened by Mr Khan in honour of his late mother.

"I'm horrified and lost for words," Mrs Khan said. "She was an amazing and remarkable woman, a loyal friend and genuine crusader who did a great deal for others."

Mine-clearing officials in Afghanistan were dismayed. "It is very sad for demining programmes, not only in Afghanistan but for the whole world," Tahsin Disbudak, regional manager of United Nations mine-clearing operations, said in Kabul. Mine-clearers would "remember her for ever".

Afghanistan has ten million landmines; Cambodia even more. The Princess was instrumental in raising world awareness of the mine crisis. She could not visit Afghanistan because it was never safe enough, but she drew attention to the fact that 400,000 Afghans have been maimed by mines.

Halo Trust, the British mine-clearing charity, whose work in Afghanistan is internationally respected, said it had lost its greatest supporter for a worldwide ban on landmines. It is a measure of the Princess's impact on the mines issue that tens of thousands of illiterate Afghans, hobbling on crutches, know her name.

Mother Teresa, in her wheelchair at her order in Calcutta yesterday, expresses her sorrow at the Princess's death. She commended the Princess for showing concern about giving help to the poor

UN chief praises battle for ban on mines

By Our Foreign Staff

Kofi Annan, the United Nations Secretary-General, led the tributes from humanitarian and charitable organisations yesterday, singling out for praise the Princess's "unflinching commitment to the cause of banning anti-personnel landmines".

He said: "The Princess made a major contribution to alleviating suffering, especially among the poor, the weak and the sick throughout the world. The tragedy has robbed the world of a consistent and committed voice for the improvement of the lives of suffering children."

Bosnian landmine victims whom the Princess visited last month were dismayed at her death. "My whole family is crying," said Plamenko Prigancic, a former soldier who lost his leg from a mine blast. "She came here to help us. She was a beautiful woman who did great work for mine victims."

Johan van der Merwe, manager of the UN landmine action centre project in Bosnia, said: "I don't know how the organisation she was involved in, the Landmine Survivors' Network, will continue to work without her."

In Geneva, Kim Gordon-Bates, the head of the International Committee of the Red Cross, said she had done a great deal "to popularise the campaign, to bring it into the homes of ordinary people around the world".

Last year the Princess resigned as head of almost 100 charities. It was a harsh blow for organisations that had relied on her as a magnet for donations. She maintained links with just six charities — the National Aids Trust, the Leprosy Mission, the English National Ballet, Centrepoin, the charity for the homeless, the Royal Marsden Hospital in London, a leading cancer research centre, and the Great Ormond Street Hospital for Children.

Annan: tribute to her commitment

American newspapers express their sorrow and anger

FROM TUNKU VARADARAJAN
IN NEW YORK AND BROWEN MADDOX
IN WASHINGTON

FROM The New York Times and The Washington Post to the Fort Worth Star-Telegram and The Billings Gazette, America's newspapers gave their front pages over to Diana, Princess of Wales.

The time her death was announced, shortly after 4am in France, or 10pm US Eastern Standard Time, meant that all but the most laggardly of American newspapers could be remade completely for their later editions.

The coverage in the New York Post was, perhaps, the most extensive. The tabloid, which ran a black-bordered front page that declared "World in shock: Diana is dead", devoted its first nine pages to the death of the

The front-page news across America yesterday

Princess. Inside, in a mixture of news and commentary, the newspaper traced the tragedy from start to finish, describing it as "a grim fairy tale". In words that were echoed in every paper across America, from the stately metropolitan broadsheets to the small provincial "Bugs" and "En-quirers", the New York Post writers had harsh words for the "swarm of ruthless paparazzi all chasing a million-dollar picture".

The front-page headlines of The New York Times late editions said: "Diana Killed in a Car Accident in Paris: In Flight from Paparazzi — Friend Dies".

Inside, in an obituary written by Warren Hoge, its London correspondent, the paper said: "The death at 36 of Diana, Princess of Wales, in a car crash in Paris, brought to a tragic close the life of a woman who had gone from being a shy young society girl to one of the world's most glamorous women."

The Los Angeles Times spoke of how the death of the Princess "brought a sudden, brutal end to a life torn with contradictions. An aristocratic beauty, whose fairytale marriage to the Prince of Wales crumbled in scandal that shook the foundations of the British Throne, she had tasted triumph and failure... The death of Diana... casts still another pall on the future of a British Crown that may grace the head of her eldest son, Prince William."

The Dallas Morning News focused on the growing "anger towards photographers" that has followed the Princess's death. The paper said: "Worldwide reaction to the death of Princess Diana and her companion Dodi Fayed in a Paris car crash was swift, sad and filled with revulsion toward the photographers who reportedly were hounding the couple."

Ronald Dworkin, Professor of Jurisprudence at Oxford University, said yesterday from his summer home in Martha's Vineyard that the First Amendment "makes it very difficult to have a general ban" on intrusive behaviour by the press and a ban "would cause tremendous constitutional problems". He added that "without condoning" harassment, "people in America are more used to the idea that celebrity carries a price, the loss of privacy."

As a limited measure, public figures can on occasion get court orders to keep named photographers or journalists at a distance, a device Jackie Kennedy Onassis was once forced to employ.

But in Hollywood, which has dubbed the increasingly aggressive feud between celebrities and paparazzi "Star Wars", celebrity lawyers are investigating whether they might be able to press for new California state legislation to protect privacy.

The move has been proposed by a spate of incidents, many blamed on British photographers, who are widely admired by Hollywood paparazzi for their aggression honed in Fleet Street. On May 1, Arnold Schwarzenegger and his wife Maria Shriver, then pregnant, were forced off the road by two British photographers when they were on their way to drop off their child at school.

In March last year, Alec Baldwin won a victory for celebrities when he was acquitted of battery against a photographer who had tried to take a picture of Kim Basinger, his wife, and their new baby.

Such is the value of big-name stories that paparazzi often find it worth their while to hire their own planes and helicopters to hover over wedding receptions or Saturday night parties.

Clinton pays tribute to a compassionate woman

'I will always be glad that I knew the Princess'

By Our Foreign Staff

MESSAGES of condolence poured in yesterday as the world reacted with shock and dismay to news of the Princess's death:

□ President Clinton, speaking on the island of Martha's Vineyard where he is on holiday, said: "We liked her very much. We admired her work for children, for people with Aids, for the cause of ending the scourge of landmines in the world and for her love for her children. William and Harry. For myself, I will always be glad that I knew the Princess."

□ Helmut Kohl, the German Chancellor, did not hesitate to condemn the media for its role in her death. "The Princess is also the victim of an increasingly brutal and unscrupulous competition between sections of the media," he said. "The terrible accident and her death should at last give those in positions of responsibility in the media to think about what they have been doing." The Chancellor praised the Princess for her "open nature and her engagement in humanitarian causes."

□ President Chirac of France described her as "a young woman of our times, warm, full of life and generosity." Lionel Jospin, the Prime Minister, said the Princess was a woman loved by the people.

WORLD REACTION

□ Luciano Pavarotti, the Italian tenor, saluted the Princess as "a beautiful symbol of harmony and love for all the world."

□ President Yeltsin's office in Moscow put out a statement saying he was profoundly shocked. "Her huge contribution to charity both in Britain and abroad is universal knowledge," a statement said. "Many exceptional projects that touched the lives of ordinary people have been put into practice in Russia with her direct participation."

□ Jim Bolger, the New Zealand Prime Minister, extended condolences on behalf of all

New Zealanders to the Royal Family, with "a great sense of sadness".

□ John Howard, Australian Prime Minister, said: "It is a very tragic and untimely accident and our thoughts are particularly with her two sons."

□ President Mandela of South Africa said the Princess had been an ambassador for victims of landmines, war orphans, the sick and needy throughout the world. "I met her when she visited our country earlier this year and was tremendously impressed. We are all devastated by the news of the death of Princess Diana... who was the best ambassador for Great Britain. She will be sadly missed as a warm, compassionate and caring person."

□ Tung Chee-hwa, Hong Kong's Chief Executive, expressed his "deep shock and sadness" while King Norodom Sihanouk of Cambodia said: "I am very sad. She was a good friend and I send my deepest condolences."

□ Benjamin Netanyahu, the Israeli Prime Minister, sent a letter of condolence to Tony Blair in which he said: "The Princess was a woman of grace, beauty and charm. She represented Britain with nobility and warmth, and she captured the imagination of millions throughout the world with her dedication to her children and to innumerable worthy causes."

□ President Ramos of the Philippines extended his sympathy for the deaths of the Princess and Dodi Fayed. "We offer sympathy and condolences to our country and people to the families of both for this very sad incident."

□ In Cairo, Union flags flew at half mast as Egyptians expressed shock at the death of the Princess and their countryman, Dodi Fayed. The official al-Ahram newspaper carried a photograph of the couple laughing and swimming recently in the Mediterranean Sea.

Suppressing emotion, President Clinton expresses his sorrow over the death of the Princess

Kohl: praise for humanitarian work

Pavarotti: a "beautiful symbol of harmony"

Acclaiming the Princess of Wales's work for the sick, President Mandela recalls her visit to South Africa

DIANA

Princess of Wales

1961-1997

The Princess selected this photograph as being her favourite image of herself. She is cuddling a dying child in Pakistan. She said: "It is in these kind of surroundings that I would prefer to be photographed" John Pryke/Reuter

3 1 3 9

of it will in id ge u-ve ly in at J- re lo ne ty on n. is an e- r- p will never be by

Y

Unlucky stars dogged her days

Growing up in the face of misery: Lady Diana Spencer in London in 1968, dressed for the country in the Isle of Uist and at home at Althorp as a teenager. As a child, she came to resent deeply, but silently, her stepmother Raine

The fates conspired to ensure the daughter of a doomed marriage with an unhappy childhood should never find fulfilment in a fairytale, writes Alan Hamilton

From the moment of her birth on July 1, 1961, the omens for the life of Lady Diana Spencer were inauspicious. The stars were ill-conjoined for a bounty of contentment, fulfilment or even of luck.

A memory that stuck with her throughout her life was the sound of crunching gravel: it was the sound of her mother's footsteps on the drive of Park House, the Spencer family home in Norfolk, as she packed her belongings in a car and drove out of her family's life. Diana, sitting bewildered and frightened at the foot of the stairs, was six years old.

It was intended as a trial separation, but it was, in fact, the end of Lord and Lady Althorp's marriage which had been sanctified in Westminster Abbey 14 years before. Diana's overwhelming sense of isolation and betrayal was compounded by her mother's departure coinciding with the sudden loss of her two elder sisters to boarding school. The sense of deprivation she carried for the rest of her life explains much of her facility for physical contact with the sick and the dying.

But even before her family life was shattered, the fates were looking unkindly on Diana. Although by no means an unwanted child, her arrival in the world provoked a sense of anticlimax rather than rejoicing.

Viscount Althorp was the heir to a family that had grown immensely rich on the back of the medieval wool trade. Although no longer in the first rank of wealth, they were still a family of substance. Diana was born with the silver spoon in her mouth, but the spoon held a drop of gall.

As with all men of his rank and position, Viscount Althorp greatly desired a male heir. But his wife, the former Frances Roche, had produced two girls. Then, at last, in 1960, she gave birth to a boy, John. But the child lived only ten hours. Lady Althorp was quickly pregnant again, but the result was another girl. So convinced were the parents that it would be a boy they had not even considered any girls' names, and it took them a week to settle on Diana Frances.

As a young girl, Diana frequently visited the grave of her short-lived brother in Sandringham churchyard and wondered if, had he lived, she would have been born at all. "I was the girl who was supposed to be a boy," she would remark in later years. A male heir, Charles, was eventually born three years after Diana, but the Althorp marriage was none the less doomed.

With her brother, Charles, in Berkshire in 1968, aged seven

The divorce was acrimonious in the extreme, with Diana and her siblings pawns in an unseemly battle for custody. The atmosphere was further poisoned by her mother being named as the other woman in the divorce of Peter Shand-Kydd, a wallpaper manufacturer. Unusually, Viscount Althorp won custody.

Johnnie Spencer, who succeeded to the earldom on the death of his father in 1975 and moved his family into the ancestral Northamptonshire seat at Althorp, seemed to dote on his children, with Diana his favourite. But in the long run, his success in the custody battle directed little happiness in the way of his youngest daughter. In the absence of a mother Diana was looked after by a succession of nannies, few of whom stayed in the job for long.

One was sacked when it was discovered that she punished the children by slipping laxatives into their food. Another was dismissed for beating Diana over the head with a wooden spoon. And all the while, from her flat in Belgravia, the children's mother battled to retain some of their affections.

Following her sisters to West Heath boarding school, Diana for a while appeared happy enough, if somewhat overshadowed in intellect and achievement by her older siblings. But even then a fresh source of unhappiness was lurking in the wings, in the shape of the Countess of Dartmouth.

Diana had never cared much for Althorp, finding it cold, echoing and formal in comparison with the much homelier Park House. But the family home became a great deal more unwelcoming with the arrival in 1977 of its new chateaine. Step-parents are, almost by

A chubby two-year-old at the family home in Park House, Norfolk. Her parents expected a son and took a week to decide a name

Continued on page 10

الجمعة ١٥ سبتمبر ١٩٩٧

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF DIANA, PRINCESS OF WALES

The Earl of Snowdon's official engagement photograph. At their press conference the couple appeared rather solemn, but the world put it down to the Prince's ponderous nature and Diana's fright at such instant stardom

First steps in the public eye: as a nursery assistant in 1980 at the start of her romance with the Prince

At Balmoral before the wedding. She hated visits and, by the late Eighties, no longer went

Tony Drabble

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF DIANA, PRINCESS OF WALES

The "fairytale" marriage: the Prince and Princess's wedding on July 29, 1981, and their kiss on the balcony of Buckingham Palace, were watched by the biggest television audience in British history Massimo Sambucetti/EPA definition, a difficulty for children, but Raine Spencer was in a class of her own. The daughter of the romantic novelist Barbara Cartland, Raine maintained the family tradition of larger-than-life personality.

Continued from page 8

Her achievements at Althorp were many, including putting the estate on a sounder financial footing and nursing Earl Spencer through a near-fatal cerebral haemorrhage. But the children, particularly Diana and her younger brother Charles, came deeply to resent her bossiness, the hold she appeared to have over their father, and the insensitive way in which she "restored" their family home, selling off treasured heirlooms and paintings, often at giveaway prices.

Diana's sweet nature held her true feelings in check, but only for so long. At a rehearsal for her brother's wedding in 1989, Raine refused to speak to Diana's mother Frances despite being seated next to her. Diana finally let loose her pent-up indignation and gave her stepmother a very public dressing-down for her total lack of feeling.

Relations between Diana and her overpowering stepmother reached their nadir during Earl Spencer's illness. As he lay in a coma, Raine did her best to prevent his children visiting him, and they had to sneak in while her back was turned. Earl Spencer survived, but in the view of his children it was small thanks to his wife.

It was shortly before the earl's illness, and not long after he had married Raine at a quiet register office ceremony, that a chance meeting took place which had the potential to transform Diana's childhood of unhappiness into an adulthood of fame, fortune and — most important of all — fulfilment. How bright the omens appeared to be. But it was to bring bitter disillusionment and, in the end, terrible tragedy.

Diana first met the world's most eligible bachelor in the middle of a ploughed field on the Althorp estate, where a shoot was in progress. The Prince of Wales was at the time taking something of an interest in Diana's elder sister Sarah, and the 16-year-old Diana, unprepossessing in anorak and wellingtons, had been brought along simply to make up the numbers. She was not impressed, and many years later recalled thinking what a sad man he was. At that first meeting, there was no hint of the romance to come. But events began to move inexorably, although imperceptibly, towards a match. Diana's sister Jane married Robert (now Sir Robert) Fellowes, then an assistant private secretary to the Queen, thus bringing the Spencers into much closer contact with the Royal Family. And two elderly ladies began to plot.

Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother was well aware that her grandson was a ditherer about women, and at the age of 30 still showed no sign of picking a bride and siring an heir. One of her closest and longest-standing friends was Ruth, Lady Fermoy, who lived near Sandringham and who happened to have a granddaughter named Lady Diana Spencer.

What part, if any, those two grandees played in bringing the couple together has never been fully explained, but it is inconceivable they did not discuss the matter. They undoubtedly encouraged it, and may even have dropped hints in the right ears.

That a romance was in progress was confirmed by an alert tabloid reporter scanning the banks of the River Dee at Balmoral during the Royal Family's summer holiday there in 1980. Through his binoculars he spotted Charles in the company of a girl he identified as Diana Spencer: from that moment, Diana became the most newsworthy woman on earth, and media interest in her never waned for a single day for the rest of her life.

The engagement sent the media into paroxysms of sentimentality. Diana was loved for being so ordinary, for living in a flat and shopping at Marks & Spencer. She seemed beguilingly shy, completely devoid of the braying characteristics of the average Sloane Ranger. People found they could relate to her, whereas her husband-to-be as heir to the throne came from a different planet, one with extremely rarefied air.

Few voices were raised in caution, such was the momentum of the fairytale bandwagon. Yet it was an unlikely match. He was more than 12 years her senior, serious of mind and with a Cambridge degree. He had had more contact with the outside world than heirs to the throne before him, but he still inhabited a world whose ways, customs, duties and responsibilities were far beyond the grasp of outsiders. He was also in love with someone else.

She, on the other hand, was a fun-loving, kind-hearted girl with five O level failures, a pretty smile, good pedigree and virtually no experience of men. At their engagement press conference and photocall, the couple appeared rather solemn for a pair supposedly in love, but the world merely put it down to Charles's ponderous nature and Diana's fright at such instant stardom. We now know that far deeper undercurrents were at work.

But nothing could spoil the sense of occasion of the big day. The country treated it as a national holiday, huge crowds lined the processional route in London, and the highly theatrical wedding ceremony in St Paul's was watched around the world by the biggest television audience in history.

Yet the very next day, on the first morning of their honeymoon at Broadlands, the Mountbatten estate in Hampshire, Charles was seen by the watching cameramen to rise early, pick up a salmon rod, and go fishing in the River Test. Diana, a naive girl just turned 20, had the highest romantic expectations of marriage. After the turmoil of her early life, she was in search of certainties: she needed a man to love, and she needed to be loved. But, in a cruel reversal of the fairytale, she kissed her Prince and he turned into a frog.

The dream was not long in turning sour, even in public. From the beginning Diana had been deeply distressed by the constant attention of photographers, and she reached the end of her tether when she was pictured in a bikini five months pregnant on a beach in the Bahamas. But the stresses in private were infinitely greater.

She knew from the beginning of Camilla Parker Bowles, but tried to convince herself, without much success, that the relationship with Charles was ancient history. Her husband appears to have done little to hide his continuing affair, even appearing at dinner during their honeymoon cruise on Britannia wearing a new pair of cufflinks engraved with two letters C.

The public life into which she had been so suddenly thrust from a previous existence of total obscurity was a parallel factor which came close to breaking her spirit. After the eventual and inevitable collapse of her marriage, she claimed that she had had next to no help or guidance from courtiers, or from other members of the Royal Family, on how to cope with her new existence, and not even much from her husband.

Above all else, she felt utterly and hopelessly alone. Yet somehow she still managed to present a brave face to the public, who little guessed that from the first days of her marriage, extremes of unhappiness and nervousness had driven her to the eating disorder of bulimia. That she was so ill-equipped for her new life, and so out of her depth with no one apparently prepared to throw her a lifeline, led within the first year of marriage to several half-hearted shows of attempted suicide, including throwing herself down stairs and thrusting her wrists through a glass cabinet.

Mother of a future king: leaving hospital in London after the birth of her son Prince William on June 21, 1982 EPI

She was acclaimed on all sides as the "human" Princess, but down-to-earth human contact was precisely what she found herself unable to cope with.

Outfitfully, she quickly gave birth to an heir, one of the few events in their married life that appeared to bring deep and genuine pleasure to both. Another son soon followed and to the end of her life her children remained the only constant stars in Diana's firmament.

But the public facade began to crack early. On official appearances, together, particularly abroad, Charles began to show small signs of irritation that his wife was catching all the attention, while he was forced to play second fiddle. Public and press were far more interested in her frocks than his worthy words. She dressed to kill, but in the early years at least she did not otherwise go out of her way to upstage her husband.

There were other telltale signs that all was not well. She became painfully thin and on at least two occasions on overseas visits she fainted — plain evidence in hindsight of that bulimia was exercising its hold on her.

But for the time being, the couple kept the royal show on the road, travelling the world and receiving unbounded adulation wherever they went. The Princess was widely spread praise for mixing easily with the poor and the sick; she achieved more than any amount of propaganda and medical education could do when she visited a leprosy hospital in Indonesia and touched the patients' withered limbs, proving that the disease is not contagious and there is no need for its sufferers to be isolated from society.

That all was not well behind the facade was shown in the late summer of 1987, when Charles flew alone to Balmoral and stayed there for a month, leaving his wife and children behind at Kensington Palace. Official spokesmen were forced into making feeble excuses about him being extremely busy managing the estate.

The couple were reunited when they were persuaded to visit homes in West Wales that had been damaged by flooding. They arrived separately, left separately for different destinations and, during the few hours they spent together, they appeared not to exchange a single word.

The marriage never recovered, and the couple spent more and more time apart. Charles burying himself at Highgrove and associating with a set of local friends who included, inevitably, Camilla Parker Bowles.

By 1992, Diana appeared at last to have come in terms with her situation, helped by two events. She surprised herself by how well she

Continued on page 13

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF DIANA, PRINCESS OF WALES

The family's last Christmas card together in 1991, the year before the separation was announced. The Princess was known to dislike riding Snowdon

THE PRICE OF FAME

Legends forged by an untimely death

By DANIEL MCGRODY

EVERYONE will for ever remember where they were when they first heard of the death of Diana, Princess of Wales. The sense of shock and loss will be compared to that November day in Dallas in 1963 when President Kennedy was assassinated. In untimely death legends are born.

There will be many comparisons made in the coming days, not least with the public adulation enjoyed by Eva Perón, who died of cancer aged 33 and who was more popular than her husband, Juan Perón, the Argentine President.

Most tragic of all will be the comparison with Princess Grace of Monaco, a beauty who transformed a monarchy and who was fated for the way that she touched the lives of all those she met.

Like Diana, Princess Grace married into a royal establishment that doubted her suitability. But Monaco recognised that Princess Grace brought glamour and popularity to the miniature Mediterranean principality.

Princess Grace was 32 when she was killed in a car crash in France on September 15, 1982. Both Princesses had held the media in thrall, often disguising the private despair at their unhappy marriages.

As an actress Grace Kelly had entranced Hollywood and had been romantically linked to many of her leading men, including Frank Sinatra. Her wedding on the French Riviera to Prince Rainier on April 19, 1956 was attended by more than 1,200 guests. A measure of her popularity was that the ceremony was one of the first events to be televised around the world.

Soon after her marriage, Princess Grace was to confess how difficult she found the transition to royal life and the strain of becoming the most photographed woman in the world. The packs of photographers that the film-maker Federico Fellini had described as paparazzi in his film La Dolce Vita, would pursue Princess Grace, as in a different generation they did more aggressively with Diana. A new photograph of Princess Grace was guaranteed to raise the circulation of any publication but, like Diana, she recognised her position made her in part "a public property".

Both women remained only too aware of the hostility of some in the establishment that they married into but their reaction was to win the public's affection and to work tirelessly for charities. Both confessed that at times they felt close to breaking point and were determined to shield their children from the intrusion that they had to suffer.

Jackie Kennedy chose to deal with increased media attention in the aftermath of her husband's assassination by becoming a near recluse. Pursued by the cameras everywhere she went, the President's widow eventually sought the protection of Aristotle Onassis, a wealthy foreign businessman, just as most recently Diana had enjoyed the companionship of Dodi Fayed, who she felt could support her lifestyle but also offer sanctuary from those that were pursuing her.

Unlike Eva Perón, Diana insisted that she never sought to use her popularity for political ends. She was distressed that her most recent support for a ban on landmines was interpreted by some MPs as interfering in government matters.

Politicians though realised the advantage of appearing to have the Princess on their side, which is why Tony Blair invited her to Chequers, and several of his ministers were sent to brief her at Kensington Palace.

Diana was only too aware of the transience of fame. She was disturbed that in some circles there were deliberate efforts made to undermine her work and her popularity. She referred to what she called the "English disease" of wanting to pull her from the pedestal of popularity.

She conceded that she had turned to a variety of figures who suffered a similar fate to see how they coped. Often there was surprise at her choice of confidantes, such as her recent invitation to the comedian Michael Barrymore to discuss how he had dealt with press hostility.

Princess Grace: feted

Statement of loneliness: in 1992 the Princess allowed herself to be photographed outside the Taj Mahal, a shrine to marital love

Separate ways: at a memorial service in Korea during a Far East tour in November 1992

United front: Prince William's first day at Eton in 1995, with his housemaster, Andrew Gailey

She w

Tom Walker in Sarajevo recalls an evening when the Princess was able to behave like a normal person

[illegible]

10-10-68

[illegible][illegible]

In Atlanta's report, the Navy was confirmed that the copy of the

[illegible]

100 chances to concentrate on issues close to her heart

44-38861-50

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF DIANA, PRINCESS OF WALES

She was happiest when she was giving

Tom Walker in Sarajevo recalls an evening when the Princess was able to behave like a normal person

At her final meal in Bosnia, Diana, Princess of Wales, free of the photographers who hounded her every move, joked about her family life and spoke with warmth and sympathy of the landmine victims she had come to visit.

There were no direct mentions of Dodi Fayed, but just a few hints of the doomed happiness they shared. On their holiday this summer in St Tropez, the Princess said, the couple had had privacy, but "only when we sailed at night".

The deep love of her sons William and Harry was evident in every mention of them. St Tropez, she said, had provided a few surprises for Harry. Attracted by the stunning beauties of a waterfront bar, Harry called his mother over, only for her to have to point out that William had discovered St Tropez's most famous transvestite haunt.

"He was so fascinated we had to look in there every night of the week," she said. "He's 13 going on 20."

It was a small dinner arranged by the Landmine Survivors' Network at the Vezir's Elephant hotel in a quiet backstreet of Travnik, in central Bosnia. There were no more than a dozen people with the Princess, and the Times was lucky enough to scrape an invitation at the last minute. Lord Deedes of The Daily Telegraph, who had chaperoned the Princess through the media traps that awaited her in Bosnia as the Dodi affair came to light, said that questions were to be kept strictly off that subject. Sky Television, which was blaring out just that in the background, was switched off.

The Princess wore jeans and a white shirt. The rigours of long journeys on Bosnia's pitted roads and the ever-present threat of media intrusion had left her tired but cheerful, and as the evening wore on and course upon course of Bosnian fare arrived, she managed to shed the straitjacket of protocol that prevented her from becoming the normal person she often longed to be.

The Princess with Chris Benett and his wife, Sandrine, and behind them Tom Walker of The Times, with, left, a Bosnian aid worker, after their dinner at an hotel in Travnik, central Bosnia

"I need those guys like a hole in the head," she remarked of the British tabloids, out there somewhere in the Bosnian darkness. As more Bosnian food was put before her, she gamely tried every course, although she did become weary of the kajmak, a Bosnian cream cheese, that accompanied everything. "Oh, not that again."

As Lord Deedes tried to keep the conversation focused on the clearing of landmines, she spoke of her wish to return to the Serb territories of Bosnia.

Originally scheduled to visit Bosnia with the Red Cross, the trip had been cancelled because the Princess would have had the embarrassment of meeting the president of the Bosnian Serb Red Cross, Lijana Karadzic, wife of the world's most wanted war crimes suspect. The Princess said that she hoped to visit Afghanistan and Georgia and also to become involved in work for the mentally handicapped and depressed.

Several times she mentioned her battles with "the Establishment" and her loathing for some Conservative MPs opposed to banning landmines. "I always have those ghastly Conservatives at my throat," she said. She spoke with admiration of Martin Bell and his campaign to clean up politics; and of Martin Bell's daughter. "Isn't she drop dead gorgeous?" she said.

Chris Benett, a journalist now working for the International Crisis Group in Bosnia, told the Princess about the enthusiasm of his parents for her marriage to the Prince of Wales: he described in detail how his family travelled around Europe that summer with Charles and Diana signs on their car. They were so happy at the time, he said. "Weren't we all?" the Princess remarked.

At the end of the evening she cheerfully gave autographs and posed for photographs for Bosnian newspapers. She took away to read Mr Benett's Yugoslavia's Bloody Collapse.

"I regretted she was a princess because you can't get to know a princess like a nice person, which is what she is," said Anna Husarska, a Polish colleague of Mr Benett and a staff member of The New Yorker.

Ms Husarska said that she saw the Princess again the next day at Sarajevo airport, where she dreaded having her photograph taken among 100 French soldiers. As she left she was carrying Mr Benett's book. "I've already read it," she said, with a wink.

In Angola in January, backing the Red Cross campaign for a landmines ban

Juda Ngwenya/Reuter

Continued from page 10

coped with the crisis surrounding the death in a skiing accident at Klosters of Hugh Lindsay, a close friend of the Prince, and the near-death of the Prince himself. And, in a particularly satisfying moment of catharsis, she confronted Mrs Parker Bowles at a birthday party and had it out with her.

As Diana herself said in her Panorama interview, the marriage had become crowded with three people in it. From that moment, it was dead. Her most public statement of her situation was to make sure she was photographed, alone, in front of the Taj Mahal, a shrine raised to marital love.

In an attempt to recover her self-esteem, she consulted gurus, fortune-tellers and astrologers. She made a determined attempt to beat her bulimia. She threw herself with renewed vigour into unpopular causes, from homelessness to Aids, that other public figures would have shied away from. Sometimes she invited publicity, sometimes she went incognito at dead of night to hold the hands of the dying.

Diana went in search of a new role, but never fully found it. She did, however, find a new man, James Hewitt, with whom she had an affair, but who in the end dumped her. The strains of public life, far from receding, merely increased with the rising speculation over her marriage and her future. She found the constant press vigilance over any sign of a new man in her life intolerable. Once again, she was deeply lonely.

Her feeling of isolation and vulnerability caused her to make a tearful public announcement that she was withdrawing from public life, blaming constant press intrusion. She did not retire from public life; she merely tried to streamline her portfolio of patronages and interests, hoping to concentrate on a select few that would fulfil her desire to be a queen of hearts.

Within hours of the screening of her BBC interview in which she both confessed to adultery and stated her ambassadorial ambition, she flew to Argentina to visit hospitals. The trip turned out to have been the result of a private invitation from a medical charity in Buenos Aires, with no input by the British Government, but she still managed to secure a lunch invitation from the Argentinian president, Carlos Menem. Diana achieved success, although not in the eyes of some Tory politicians, when she took up the cause of landmines. Her visit to Angola, a country infested with mines after its

Continued on page 14

The Princess meets casualties of landmines at a centre near the Angolan capital, Luanda

Joao Silva/AP

THE TIMES MONDAY
Dema

Bitter say has h on its

IMPS

Strict priv

Cover girl: the Princess was pictured, wearing a Versace gown, in July. Mario Testino

DIANA, PRINCESS OF WALES

Continued from page 13

lengthy civil war, was a considerable triumph and brought the issue of unexploded mines to world attention, attention she capitalised on with a trip to Bosnia on the same quest.

The formal announcement of the couple's separation by John Major in the House of Commons in 1992, the last straw in the Queen's annus horribilis, brought her no pleasure. She did not want divorce, hoping that some reconciliation might be possible. But, after a great deal of dithering and heel-dragging by her husband, ended only by a demand from the Queen for positive action one way or the other, the divorce went through last year.

Diana was now a free woman, but being the world's most desirable divorcee is an awesome burden to carry. Conducting a romance is near-impossible when the lenses of the world's paparazzi are trained on one's every move. She said recently that, were it not for her children, she would go and live permanently abroad. Such a move would have solved nothing. Jacqueline Kennedy, finding herself the world's most famous widow, opted for the security and physical protection of life with Aristotle Onassis. Diana formed a relationship with Dodi Fayed, a man whose wealth meant that he could offer a degree of Onassis-style security with his villas and guards.

But those inauspicious omens were still haunting Diana. She was clearly quite happy for the world to know about her new beau, even though she had chosen the son of a man who attempted to win respectability by buying Harrods but who had been refused a British passport and who contributed to the downfall of the last government with his revelations about cash provided by him to MPs.

Had it been allowed to continue, the relationship with Dodi Fayed would probably have ended in tears. Sadly, it ended in terrible tragedy. Even in her death, the fates were unkind to Diana.

FASHION AND BEAUTY

Glamorous figure who turned heads towards good causes

The Princess's captivating beauty was obvious from the moment she came to public attention. What changed over the years was her ability to project that beauty, becoming in effect her own image maker (Grace Bradberry writes).

Though the endless attention paid by others to her clothes and her hairstyle may have bored her, she was aware that it was partly her glamour that made her such a powerful figurehead for charities and campaigns.

One of her final acts of generosity was to auction 79 of her dresses for the Aids Crisis Trust and The Royal Marsden Hospital Cancer Fund in June. She took immense trouble to produce the pictures for the Christie's catalogue and the pre-publicity, thus ensuring that the maximum amount of money would be raised.

She sat for two photographers, first for the Earl of Snowdon, who produced the formal pictures for the catalogue, and then for Mario Testino, a Peruvian fashion photographer, whose stunning, informal shots of the Princess appeared in Vanity Fair in July. It was the Princess's idea to bring along to this second shoot an entirely new dress — a silvery satin column by Versace. She appeared on the magazine cover wearing this, creating a far more modern image than if she had worn one of her dresses from the 1980s. Nevertheless, the auction was another boost for the British designers she had supported throughout her marriage and afterwards — notably Bruce Oldfield, Amanda Wakeley, Victor Edelstein and Catherine Walker.

The stunning clothes were only a very small part of the Princess's allure. She had an ability to radiate warmth, both in front of the camera lens and in person, and her charisma owed as much to her personality as to her good looks.

As she grew older, she became increasingly aware of this glamorous appeal and tried to enhance it when it was needed and subdue it when it might be inappropriate. At charity events, particularly in America, she used it to the full — at a charity ball in Chicago last June, then last September at a breast cancer fundraising gala in Washington. Her presence enabled organisers to charge up to £1,000 a ticket.

But the Christie's auction was intended to signal a switch towards a more serious public image. Ultimately, some of the most enduring pictures may well be those of the Princess, plainly dressed in trousers and shirt, walking across a minefield in Angola. Even as she took such a risk, she may have been aware that it was partly her charisma that would draw world attention to the victims of war.

One of the 79 dresses auctioned in June. Alan Weller

The Princess with Dodi Fayed at St Tropez in the South of France, on their most recent holiday together in the Mediterranean

THE MEN IN HER LIFE

Fayed's generosity touched her heart

The last few weeks in the life of Diana, Princess of Wales, were the happiest she has experienced in recent years, according to her friends (Emma Wilkins writes). The growing love affair with Dodi Fayed was the Princess's most serious relationship since the announcement of her divorce from the Prince of Wales last year.

The Princess, who had already introduced Mr Fayed to her sons, was photographed only a few days before her death splashing about in the Mediterranean with the heir to the Harrods fortune.

The pictures — inevitably taken by a paparazzo photographer — showed a carefree Princess with an adoring Mr Fayed clearly at ease in each other's company.

Although the Princess had become friendly with several men after her separation from the Prince — most particularly the heart surgeon Hasnat Khan — Mr Fayed was special. Even the accusations of Kelly Fisher, his "fitted" former girlfriend, failed to daunt the Princess in her determination to continue the romance.

Since the affair became serious during a holiday in St Tropez last month with Mohamed Al Fayed, the Princess took three further trips abroad with him.

First, they cruised off Sardinia, then Mr Fayed, 41, flew her to Paris to visit the Duke and Duchess of Windsor's former home, and most recently the couple cruised again around the Mediterranean before flying home via the Ritz in Paris. It was Mr Fayed's kindness and generosity that the Princess found so appealing. The couple met ten years ago at a polo match at Windsor but it was not until July this year that they became especially close.

When the Princess returned home to Kensington Palace she told friends that the trip on Mr Al Fayed's £15 million yacht, the Jonikal, was the happiest holiday she had had for years. Mr Fayed, a Hollywood film producer, was already a friend of the Princess's stepmother Raine, Countess of Chamberlain. The countess, who was in Venice when she received news of the Princess's death, adored Mr Fayed, praising his kindness, generosity and gentleness.

Mr Fayed, who has a self-effacing nature despite his playboy image, was married in 1986 to an American model, Suzanne Gregard. The relationship ended in divorce eight months later.

The Princess's friendship with Dr Khan, 36, blossomed from his work as a heart surgeon at Harefield Hospital and the Royal Brompton hospitals. The ability of Dr Khan and his colleague Professor, St Magdi Yacoub, fascinated her.

When the Princess visited Dr Khan's family during a charity trip to Pakistan earlier this year, there was press speculation about the nature of their friendship. Dr Khan, who has never spoken about the extent of his relationship with the Princess, was said to be deeply shocked and distraught yesterday.

The Princess admitted her love affair with James Hewitt in her

Panorama interview in November 1995. She was asked by the journalist Martin Bashir if her relationship with the young cavalry officer had gone beyond friendship. "Yes, I adored him. Yes, I was in love with him," the Princess replied. "But I was very let down."

The pair, who met in 1986 when Captain Hewitt taught Prince William how to ride, enjoyed a love affair as the Princess's marriage began to fall apart. When Captain Hewitt was serving in the Gulf War in 1990-91, the Princess wrote him long and comforting letters.

Captain Hewitt was later censured when he appeared to co-operate with Princess in Love, a gushing account of his romance with the Princess written by Anna Pasternak. He has always denied making any money from the enterprise, but later managed to move from a small cottage to a larger house in Devon.

Although the Princess became close to other men, including Will Carling, the England rugby captain, and Oliver Hoare, the art dealer, the nature of their friendships has always remained private.

The Princess's friendship with Mr Carling began when she met him at the Harbour Club, her gym in London. Mr Carling's wife, Julia, later blamed the Princess for the break-up of her marriage but Mr Carling himself denied there was anything improper in their relationship.

Hewitt: she "adored" him

Cover girl: the Princess was pictured, wearing a Versace gown, in July. Mario Testino

Of the un-races of Lal the Or the ba des Me
fav trie
ph Ver tal
Fay hac air ear cou
Fay
tear qua
by Ritz
of T
from app
the ph

Ti
ser
of uz
as with of Pe
Vi ov di be Sa nk lau lif ha
No
Gt
the mi nu sh

Cont
Squa
lande airfie
Paris
high vehic
Pre hospi them
the ju Koud head advan
Gard side o Pavill
Nu

Demands grow to keep paparazzi hounds at bay

Anti-stalking legislation may offer solution to harassment without privacy laws, reports Richard Ford

THE Government faced growing pressure for new privacy laws to clamp down on the media and curb the activity of paparazzi. Anger erupted outside Buckingham Palace with members of the public accusing journalists of hounding the Princess.

The calls for some form of action by the Government were heightened by a bitter attack by Earl Spencer, brother of the Princess, who accused every media proprietor and editor who had paid for intrusive pictures of his sister of having "blood on their hands".

Bitter brother says press 'has her blood on its hands'

FROM SAM KILEY IN JOHANNESBURG

A DRAWN and grief-stricken Earl Spencer, the Princess's brother, yesterday blamed the press for his sister's death. He said that every editor and owner of every publication that had published intrusive pictures of her "has blood on its hands".

He added that he "always believed the press would kill her in the end. But not even I could believe they would take such a direct hand in her death as seems to be the case."

A bitter Lord Spencer, who had himself worked for American television networks covering celebrity stories, read his statement to about 30 journalists outside his Cape Town home, adding: "It would appear that every proprietor and every editor of every publication that had paid for intrusive and exploitative photographs of her, encouraging greedy and ruthless individuals to risk everything in pursuit of Diana's image, has blood on its hands today."

Lord Spencer said that he had learnt of his sister's death with profound shock. Dressed in a blue jacket, blue shirt and slacks, he spoke after opening his electronic gates to media who have dogged his life in Cape Town. Earlier this year he took out a court injunction to stop one photographer clambering on to his property after his separation from his wife Victoria.

Himself no stranger to controversy after several extramarital affairs and an friendship with Darius Guppy, who was jailed for insurance fraud, Lord Spencer said all who came into contact with the Princess, particularly during the past 17 years, would share his family's grief.

"She understood the most precious needs of human beings, particularly those that suffered, and her vibrancy and sparkle combined with a very real sense of duty are now gone forever. It is heartbreaking to lose such a human being, especially when she was only 36."

"My heart goes out to the families of the two others killed in this incident. Above all my thoughts are with William and Harry and with my mother and sister who are showing tremendous bravery in the face of senseless tragedy."

Lord Spencer was expected to fly to England for the funeral and can expect to be followed closely by local and international media every step of the way back to a country he left, in part, to escape the British press.

He appealed for his family to be left to grieve in peace. "I ask you please at this time to respect the fact that Diana was part of a family and among the general mourning at her death to realise we, too, need space to pay our final respects to our flesh and blood. For that we need privacy."

Sifting tears and shaking he walked back into Tarrystone House with one last comment: "I pray that she rest in peace."

Earl Spencer, the Princess's brother, reads a statement to South African journalists outside his Cape Town home

Cook hint of action 'over role played by aggressive intrusion'

FROM DAVID WATTS IN MANILA

ROBIN COOK, the Foreign Secretary, yesterday issued a veiled warning against the media of the possibility of a privacy law in the wake of the Princess's death.

Mr Cook, who was the first Government Minister to receive news of the accident in the early hours, said: "In the longer term, questions will have to be asked as to whether aggressive intrusion has played a part in her death."

He was speaking on the apron at Manila airport, where his RAF VC-10 airliner was held for 90 minutes while he awaited confirmation of the facts from the French Ministry of the Interior.

Asked if the exposure of his own affair with his secretary in the press had coloured his view, Mr Cook replied: "I have made no complaint there."

Later a Foreign Office spokesman said that Mr Cook had not been proposing anything new, "let alone a single way of dealing with this", the spokesman added: "He is not saying the only answer is this or that. The first question is to examine the nature of the incident. His primary thought is how the press itself is going to deal with this."

Mr Cook paid tribute to the courage of the Princess: "She had walked through minefields to make her point and to give a clear and graphic demonstration of the dangers."

He also spoke of her work in breaking down prejudices against Aids sufferers.

"There were two features I would focus on," he said. "The first was her courage, and the second was the strong personal compassion she felt for children maimed by land mines." Mr Cook's next stop, Singapore, was to have been the venue for one of the Princess's next charity events in aid of her Aids campaign. It would have taken place in the middle of September.

Cook: questions must be asked, he said

If MPs do not create privacy law, judges will

With media self-regulation unlikely to satisfy any longer, Frances Gibb assesses legal options for balancing individuals' rights against public interest

BRITAIN will acquire a law of privacy within months when the Government legislates to enshrine the European Convention on Human Rights.

France, where the Princess was killed allegedly being pursued by paparazzi, already has tough privacy laws. Photographers can be liable to criminal prosecution for an invasion of privacy as well as facing civil suits.

When pictures of a topless Duchess of York showed her with her then financial adviser, John Bryan, who sued for invasion of privacy. He recovered more than £50,000 in damages for the duchess and himself. But despite pressure from many politicians, successive British governments have resisted a privacy law and instead compromised by allowing the industry to continue its self-regulation, backed by tougher sanctions enforced by the Press Complaints Commission. Now, under a Labour Government, a privacy law of some kind appears inevitable because the European Convention contains a right of privacy and enables individuals to obtain redress.

Even without the present Government's stance, it is likely that a privacy law would have emerged through rulings of the courts. Lord Bingham of Cornhill, the Lord Chief Justice, said recently that if Parliament did not legislate for a privacy law, it was likely that the courts would create one.

The debate now will focus on how that law should be framed. There are two options: as Lord Irvine of Lairg, the Lord Chancellor, put it, the question is whether such laws should be fashioned by Parliament, in the shape of a statute, or whether a privacy law should be left to be shaped by the judges, as they create the common law through their rulings in the courts.

Peter Carter-Ruck, the leading media lawyer, said yesterday: "I personally favour a new right of privacy and I have framed proposals for this and submitted them to the Lord Chancellor."

He said that he opposed using the criminal law, as recommended by Sir David Calcutt's committee on privacy of 1989-90. "This would penalise the young journalist doing the bidding of his employer and hamper investigative journalism in its efforts to expose crime and corruption," Mr Carter-Ruck said.

"There should, however, be a right of redress for individuals whose privacy has been invaded, balanced with a public interest defence."

The choices offered are:
□ A common-law right of privacy. The most likely way forward is a new tort, or civil wrong, created by the judges. Individuals would be able to seek damages and to obtain injunctions to stop publications. The Government has no plans to create a statutory right of privacy and Tony Blair is thought to favour leaving a right to be created by the courts, step by step.

But against that, Lord Irvine points out that action by Parliament could be more specific and comprehensive. In a recent press interview, he said that the press "might think, if they were more intelligent, they would get a more moderate and politically balanced privacy law out of Parliament."

"The common law cannot fashion remedies with quite the subtlety of Parliament because Parliament is all-powerful and can do anything it likes." A tort of privacy could mean "heavy actions and court cases" with large awards as in libel actions, he added.

□ A statutory right of privacy. Parliament could fashion a law of privacy balanced by a public interest defence. Journalists and others held to breach an individual's right would have a defence that their actions were justified on public interest grounds — a defence that would come into play with public figures. A first step towards a statutory right of privacy has been taken. The Government has published plans to control the use of personal information stored on computers.

Some believe this could cover "foot in the door" journalism and long-range photographs of celebrities. The Home Office says that there will be exemptions, including police and security services, but has ruled out a blanket exemption for the media.

□ Criminal sanctions. If Parliament enacts a statute to protect privacy, the question arises whether there should be only civil remedies for any breach or whether invasion should amount to a criminal offence. The Calcutt committee on privacy recommended various new criminal offences to catch photographic and electronic intrusion but the recommendations were never enacted.

Neil says tabloid Editors and the public should look in the mirror

Strict privacy laws 'did not prevent what happened in Paris'

Andrew Neil says stalking legislation should be extended to provide protection against harassment, reports Carol Midgley

NEWSPAPER Editors were reluctant to defend their corners in the wake of calls for a privacy Bill yesterday.

Neither Stuart Higgins, Editor of The Sun, nor Piers Morgan, Editor of The Mirror, who have both paid high prices for "intrusive" photographs of the Princess, were available for comment.

However, Andrew Neil, Editor in Chief of The Scotsman and former Editor of The Sunday Times, which serialised the explosive biography Diana: Her True Story, said demands for a privacy Bill were misguided and were being made by people who had a grudge against the press.

He said that while the behaviour of certain paparazzi was disgraceful, it was also the tabloid Editors and the public who should "take a look at themselves in the mirror" today. Members of the public who "lapped up" prurient photographs in the tabloids, creating the huge international demand, yet condemned the taking of them were guilty of hypocrisy.

He also pointed out that the tragedy had happened in France, where privacy laws are among the strictest but had not prevented the incident. A privacy Bill would "only bite once photographs were published, and did not stop what may have happened in Paris," Mr Neil said. "What it would stop is the activities of the Sunday Times Insight team and other legitimate investigative journalism."

"A lot of people now ganging up on the press are people who have borne a grudge for some time, of which David Mellor and Charles Althorp [Earl Spencer] are classic examples. Both of them were brought low by the press because the press revealed their own wrongdoing. They are out for revenge."

Mr Mellor, former Conservative National Heritage Secretary, said the Princess's death was a watershed, a "defining moment" which must herald change. He called for newspaper editors to put their houses in order, but stopped short of calling for a privacy law.

"The world cannot be the same again after this tragedy. We've been robbed of a woman who could have done a lot of good for many decades, and to whom her children would turn as a necessary source of influence. That woman has been taken away from us by her hatred and fear of these photographers."

Mr Neil said a national privacy law would have very limited effectiveness against photographers dealing in pictures which were an international commodity. But there was a case for tougher laws to prevent photographers making a misery of the lives of people like Diana. "We have laws against stalking now, though they have taken long enough to come about. They should now be extended to protect against harassment. If you can simply walk out of a building and photographers come up and stick cameras in your face and pursue you relentlessly, then the law isn't strong enough."

Alan Rusbridger, Editor of The Guardian, also urged fellow journalists to respect famous people's right to some privacy. "It may be that it's impossible to find laws that prevent this kind of thing. But I think that shouldn't stop the press from a great deal of soul searching about conceding that people do have a right to privacy. I think the British press doesn't sufficiently differentiate between what is in the public domain and what is in the private domain, and that is something they are going to have to debate," he told the BBC.

Robin Cook, the Foreign Secretary, was the first politician to raise the spectre of privacy laws. Speaking from the Far East, he said: "In the longer term serious questions will have to be asked whether the aggressive intrusion into [the Princess's] privacy has contributed to this tragedy," he said.

□ The London Evening Standard yesterday produced a 32-page memorial tribute to the Princess which it gave away free at Underground stations.

In it, Dave Bennett, a paparazzo, wrote that a "small minority" of his colleagues had "made Diana's life hell", blackening the name of other professional photographers.

"What the paparazzi did to Diana was unacceptable. I would turn up to functions, having been invited, ask her to smile and take her picture. Occasionally she would not and I might go away disappointed. But what I did not do was jump in my car and chase her at high speed."

Double edge to relationship with the media

Publicity was both an asset and a scourge for the world's best known personality, writes Joanna Bale

AS THE most photographed woman in the world, the Princess enjoyed a love-hate relationship with the media. While she had many angry confrontations with the photographers who dogged her every move, she often took advantage of the relentless appetite for pictures and television footage of her.

Her self-proclaimed role as "Queen of people's hearts" was built up through skilful manipulation of the media. When she visited a hostel for the homeless or an Aids ward in hospital, she made sure that mainstream newspaper photographers were tipped off. As her marriage crumbled, she dropped the broadest of hints by posing alone in front of the Taj Mahal.

She invited television cameras into the operating theatre to record her watching a heart operation on a seven-year-old child at Harefield Hospital in west London. She also evoked sympathy by talking about the Prince of Wales's infidelity with Camilla Parker Bowles in an interview on Panorama with Martin Bashir, the BBC journalist.

Although newspaper photographers were the target for abuse from angry members of the public outside Buckingham Palace yesterday, they were not at the core of her problem of unwanted press attention. Her problem was with the freelance operators who stalked her constantly, who relied solely on her for their living and who were not accountable to an editor, although editors paid handsomely for their pictures.

Motivated by the huge amounts of money that exclusive pictures of the Princess could command, especially those of her with male friends, the paparazzi went to extraordinary lengths to capture her every move. She once described the intrusiveness as akin to being raped.

However, in 1993, Lord McGregor of Durris, then chairman of the Press Complaints Commission, was forced to conclude that the intrusions into "the private lives of the Prince and Princess of Wales were intrusions contrived by the Princess herself and her entourage". He also pointed out that "the Princess had, in practice, invaded her own privacy" by briefing journalists about her private life.

While the Princess sometimes ignored the paparazzi, she would often jump lights and break speed limits to escape them. Some of the more responsible photographers who observed this behaviour from the sidelines said yesterday that her death or that of an innocent bystander was inevitable.

A book called Dying With Di, written by two paparazzi, Mark Saunders and Glenn Harvey, describes an incident in which they chased the Princess at high speed along the M4. Mr Saunders writes: "It took her about five seconds to realise she was being followed. Diana knows my car well enough and I could see her looking at me in the rear-view mirror. She indicated left and pulled across to the middle lane, slowing down considerably and forcing me to pass. And then, in a moment of insanity which to this day neither Glenn or I will ever understand, she increased her speed and lurched back into the fast lane, coming up directly behind me. We were travelling at 90mph when I felt her bumper touch the rear of my car."

"The cars carried on, bumper to bumper, in the fast lane... By now I was genuinely scared. I could see Diana's face in the rear-view mirror. She looked possessed. She was driving with only one hand, with the other gesturing wildly at me." The confrontation ended when Mr Saunders increased his speed and pulled into the middle lane, forcing the Princess to pass him.

In another confrontation, the Princess screamed at photographers "You make my life hell" when taking her sons to see Jurassic Park at a cinema in Leicester Square. Earlier this year, she forced another photographer, Brendan Beirne, to hand over his film after appealing for help to a passer-by, who held him in an armlock.

Many freelance paparazzi refused to heed her pleas for privacy, believing she was a fair target because, apart from being in the public eye, they knew that she used the media when it suited her.

In her battle against them, the Princess also tried more conventional methods. In 1996, she complained to the Press Complaints Commission about pictures of her on holiday in France, published in The Mirror. She also threatened legal action against The Mirror when it published photographs taken secretly of her exercising in a gym. She settled out of court.

Last year, she obtained an injunction against a freelance photographer, Martin Stanning, preventing him from approaching within 300 metres of her.

One photographer, who declined to be named, said yesterday: "All these incidents merely fuelled the demand for photographs of her. If she had been advised to ignore us, she might still be alive today."

A police van taking six French photographers and one Macedonian through the streets of Paris for questioning about the fatal accident.

Paparazzi cash in on La Dolce Vita

By A Staff Reporter

THE tools of their trade were slow, sputtering motor scooters, cumbersome box-shaped cameras with flash bulbs — and patience.

Forty years on their motor-cycles have engines worthy of grand prix races, private helicopters, motor-driven cameras that can shoot ten frames a second and arm-long lenses that cost as much as a car.

The targets of paparazzi then and now are the same: the rich and famous who alternately court the photographers and run from them.

Since their birth during the Dolce Vita era in Rome, their stalking tactics and their love-hate relationship with celebrities have been controversial.

thrust them in the spotlight again. Ironically, the last country where the Princess holidayed was Italy, birthplace of the paparazzi. She left Sardinia for Paris on Saturday.

Paparazzi first burst onto the scene in 1958. At Rome's now legendary Via Veneto, American film stars, deposed kings and the residue of Italian nobility frolicked and held court at sidewalk cafes. Tazio Secchiaroli, the photographer who was the inspiration for much of Federico Fellini's 1960 film, La Dolce Vita, discovered that editors who were tired of glossy studio handouts paid him more for surprise pictures.

He and his "accomplices" developed the tactics for bringing the stars to life, even if this meant provoking them somewhat. One night in 1958 they immortalised Egypt's deposed King Farouk overturning a restaurant table in rage, an American actor punching a photographer who caught him dining with Ava Gardner, and a two-fisted Anthony Steele lurching at a photographer while the blonde, buxom Anita Ekberg waited in a car.

Fellini: based film on the Italian paparazzi

cafe society, saw some of their pictures and sought out Secchiaroli. The late director based a character in La Dolce Vita on Secchiaroli and named him Paparazzo. In the film, Paparazzo was the photographer who worked with actor Marcello Mastroianni, who played a frustrated gossip reporter.

Secchiaroli, 72 and retired, said last night that the Princess's death showed there were no longer limits of good taste in his profession, but he faulted the Princess and Dodi Fayed for apparently fleeing photographers. "The limits [of photographers] should be good taste. There is a limit where someone should just say 'stop'. You shouldn't let it go this far," Secchiaroli said. "But on the other hand I don't see why people [in the public eye] try to run away from paparazzi. At a certain point, they should just let themselves be photographed and move on. At least half of the fault is that of the people who were in the car."

Paparazzi have changed since Secchiaroli's days. "Today, some paparazzi are more like secret service agents rather than photographers," said Gianni Giansanti, one of Italy's most respected photographers. Giansanti said there should be no rush to lay all the blame on the photographers. "Remember that it is the newspapers that want those pictures and pay all that money for them."

Secchiaroli said the days of the old-style paparazzi looking for a picture that would buy that night's dinner were long gone. "In our day it was different. There were two or three of us on a hunt for pictures. Perhaps today there are too many, in my view never would have reached this point. There were small fistfights and skirmishes. But this is really shocking."

Agent for photos is 'bereft' at loss

By Joanna Bale

THE photographer who made a fortune from the first picture of Diana, Princess of Wales, kissing Dodi Fayed said yesterday he was mourning their deaths and described the accident as an "horrible tragedy".

Jason Fraser acts as an agent for foreign photographers, securing deals worth thousands of pounds from British newspapers. Speaking from the South of France, where he had recently photographed the couple on holiday, he declined to comment on whether he was also mourning the loss of the thousands of pounds he would have continued to earn had the Princess lived.

"This is not the time to discuss how it will affect my business," he said. "It is an absolute tragedy and I find it very difficult to believe."

Mr Fraser, 30, distancing himself from the methods used by the French paparazzi pursuing the couple, maintained that he had never harassed the Princess. He said: "I recorded only a week ago some very happy moments of her life at a respectful distance, two or three hundred metres away."

He went on: "The Princess had at last found some sort of happiness. What happened in Paris is an horrible disaster. I have been photographing her since I was a teenager and I am bereft."

Mr Fraser has built up a

Fraser: brokered the pictures of the kiss reputation as being able to secure the best price in the market. The first photographs of the Princess and Mr Fayed kissing aboard a yacht in St Tropez were taken by an Italian paparazzo, Mario Brenna, then sold through Mr Fraser. He negotiated a £250,000 deal with the Sunday Mirror for first rights, and £100,000 apiece from the Daily Mail and the The Sun for second rights, and enjoyed a substantial cut of the proceeds.

He now earns as much selling other photographers' work as he does from taking his own pictures.

The multilingual Mr Fraser belongs to an elite circle of seven or eight photographers across the world who control the circulation of each others' material and trade information about the whereabouts of the rich and famous.

The rewards are considerable, but Mr Fraser is understandably coy about his earnings. Some indication can be gained from the amount of money he spends on getting the pictures. In the South of France he hired a helicopter at £2,000 a day; a boat at £1,000 a day and a large hotel suite at £500 a day.

Justifying his pursuit of the Princess in a recent interview, he said: "I think she, like everybody else, is entitled to a certain degree of privacy but she abdicated a certain amount of that when she started briefing journalists."

"Understandably she wants to put her views across but, if you are going to forge those close relationships with journalists, you have to understand that other journalists will want to correct the imbalance."

He said photographs of intimate moments between the Princess and Mr Fayed were justified due to their relationship's "constitutional impact". If she had married him he would have become stepfather to the future King.

revised interest rates

NOTICE TO ALL BORROWERS
The Society's standard variable base rate for new and existing borrowers will be increased to 8.39% from 1st September 1997 or at such other time in accordance with the terms of the mortgage deed.
NOTICE TO INVESTORS
REVISED INTEREST RATES
EFFECTIVE AT 1st SEPTEMBER 1997
AMOUNT INVESTED	GROSS %	NET %	GROSS %	NET %
	(MONTHLY)	(MONTHLY)	(MONTHLY)	(MONTHLY)
CURRENT ISSUES
NOVA STAR (NINTH ISSUE)
£10,000 - £30,000	6.40	5.12	6.15	4.92
£30,000 - £50,000	4.50	3.60	4.35	3.40
NOVA PLUS SPECIAL ACCOUNT
£200,000 - £300,000	4.60	3.68	-	-
NOVA PLUS (ISSUE 2) / NOVA GROSS (ISSUE 2)
£50,000 - £300,000	4.40	3.52	4.40	3.52
£10,000 - £49,999	3.85	3.08	3.85	3.08
£5,000 - £9,999	3.10	2.48	3.10	2.48
£1,000 - £4,999	2.80	2.24	-	-
TESSA 3
£1,000 - £9,999	7.25	-	-	-
SMALL SAVERS DEPOSIT ACCOUNT
£1 - £999	3.90	3.12	-	-
INSTANT ACCESS DEPOSIT ACCOUNT
£50,000 - £300,000	4.40	3.52	4.40	3.52
£10,000 - £49,999	3.85	3.08	3.85	3.08
£5,000 - £9,999	3.10	2.48	3.10	2.48
£1,000 - £4,999	2.80	2.24	-	-
CLOSED ISSUES
NOVA PLUS / NOVA GROSS ACCOUNT
£30,000 - £300,000	4.40	3.52	4.40	3.52
£10,000 - £49,999	3.85	3.08	3.85	3.08
£5,000 - £9,999	3.10	2.48	3.10	2.48
£1,000 - £4,999	2.80	2.24	-	-
SMALL SAVERS ACCOUNT
£1 - £999	3.90	3.12	-	-

Interest is payable on the prevailing rate of interest which may be reduced by non-payment or subject to the terms of the mortgage deed. The interest rate is subject to change without notice. For individuals whose income falls within the lower or basic rate bands, the interest rate will be reduced to 7.89% from 1st September 1997 or at such other time in accordance with the terms of the mortgage deed. For individuals whose income falls within the higher or additional rate bands, the interest rate will be reduced to 7.39% from 1st September 1997 or at such other time in accordance with the terms of the mortgage deed. The interest rate will be reduced to 7.39% from 1st September 1997 or at such other time in accordance with the terms of the mortgage deed. The interest rate will be reduced to 7.39% from 1st September 1997 or at such other time in accordance with the terms of the mortgage deed.

You know where you are with us

Principal Office: Portland House,
New Bridge St, Newcastle upon Tyne NE1 8AL
www.newcastle.co.uk

For further information please complete the coupon or

TELEPHONE 0191 244 2244 IN OR OUT OF OFFICE HOURS

CLOSED ISSUES
NOVA 30
£50,000 - £300,000	7.30	5.84	7.05	5.64
NOVA GROSS SPECIAL ACCOUNT
£200,000 - £300,000	4.60	-	-	-
TESSA 2
£1 - £9,999	7.25	-	-	-
DIRECT 50
£100,000 - £300,000	7.65	6.12	7.40	5.92
NOVA STAR (SIXTH/SEVENTH ISSUE)
£100,000 - £300,000	6.40	5.12	6.15	4.92
NOVA STAR (EIGHTH ISSUE)
£100,000 - £300,000	6.40	5.12	6.15	4.92
NOVA SELECT II
£25,000 - £300,000	6.30	5.20	6.25	5.00
£10,000 - £24,999	6.40	5.12	6.15	4.92
BONUS BOOSTER BOND (ISSUE 1)
£25,000 - £300,000	Up To	6.45*	5.16	6.20*	4.96
£10,000 - £24,999	Up To	6.35*	5.08	6.10*	4.88
BONUS BOOSTER BOND (ISSUE 2)
£25,000 - £300,000	Up To	6.45*	5.16	6.20*	4.96
£10,000 - £24,999	Up To	6.35*	5.08	6.10*	4.88
NOVA SUPER FEEDER (S.A.Y.E. FEEDER ACCOUNT)
£5,000 - £300,000	6.15	4.92	-	-
NOVA FEEDER (S.A.Y.E. FEEDER ACCOUNT)
£1,200	5.15	4.12	-	-
HIGH/EXTRA HIGH INTEREST ACCOUNTS
£50,000 - £300,000	4.40	3.52	4.40	3.52
£10,000 - £49,999	3.85	3.08	3.85	3.08
£5,000 - £9,999	3.10	2.48	3.10	2.48
£1,000 - £4,999	2.80	2.24	-	-

If you require further information about Newcastle Building Society products, please place coupon in an envelope and post to: Newcastle Direct, FREEPOST NEWCASTLE (No stamp required).

Name: _____

Address: _____

Postcode: _____

Home Telephone Number: _____ Date: _____

☐ I require further information about Newcastle Building Society products.

Newcastle Direct is a service provided by Newcastle Building Society.

TT 807

The Princess and Dodi Fayed in the South of France

PIANO AUCTION

8th September 1997

To include over 100 quality pianos by Steinway, Bechstein, Blüthner and others.

Next sale
17th November
1997

For further information or to include a piano in this sale please contact Carolyn Marsh on (01462) 450367 (weekdays)

10 Savoy Rd, Devonport, London W1 0AB
Tel: (0171) 239 9000

Public figures are increasingly fighting against the antics of the paparazzi, reports Alexandra Frean

One of the motorcycles involved in the crash being removed by French police yesterday. Tom Cruise was pursued by paparazzi in the same tunnel

Carol Midgley on how normal service was abandoned

Jackson has been staying in Paris during his tour but Ms Van Staen could not confirm a report he had been at the Ritz Hotel where the Princess and Dodi Fayed dined shortly before the crash.

■ Did the death of the Princess warrant such TV and radio coverage?
Peter Barnard thinks it did

As early as lunchtime yesterday I had passed an elderly woman watching an old movie on a cable channel, who answered my unasked question with, "Well, it's nothing but Diana on the others." I cannot believe that reaction was typical, but it was replicated by considerable numbers of people.

So did the death of the princess warrant coverage all day, most of it on both BBC channels? Yes, I think it did. On the BBC, Lord Alton made a comparison with the assassination of Jack Kennedy in 1963. He was right. On both days, other things happened.

[illegible]

TURN YOUR COMPANY GOLF DAY INTO A TOUR EVENT

4 STEPS TO LA MANGA...

Register your company golf day with The Times MeesPierson Corporate Golf Challenge, and compete with over 1,000 other companies for a place in the 1997 final at La Manga Club, Spain.

1. Registration

2. Your Company Golf Day

For further information and registration details you can:

1. Fax back:

0660 600 667 (CALLS COST 49P PER MINUTE)

for a registration form.

2. Access the event internet site on:

<http://www.golftoday.co.uk/timescorpgolf>

3. Contact us on:

0171 405 7273/

0141 221 2225 (SCOTLAND)

- A one off entry fee of £150 plus VAT.
- At least one in four chance that the qualifiers from your company golf day go forward to represent your company in one of the fourteen regional finals held in October, the winners of which qualify for the National Final at La Manga in November.

3. Regional Finals

4. The Final at La Manga

TITLE SPONSORS

Mees Pierson

MERCHANT BANKERS SINCE 1720

National Final shown on

ASSOCIATE SPONSORS

CITROËN

WATERFORD CRYSTAL

GOLF WORLD

Grief felt across all walks of life

Jane Shilling sees an outpouring of grief from the cheap flowers left by nightclubbers to the eloquent tributes of national leaders

"I HOPE," said the historian and royal biographer Ben Pimlott, speaking yesterday on BBC television news, "that Diana will be remembered as a human being and not some sort of Goddess. One is appalled by the way the imagery develops."

But yesterday it was evident that the mythology of Diana, Princess of Wales, was beyond the control of ordinary historical record. Even as her body was being brought home, history had already begun to construct her complicated epitaph.

Diana, the Princess of Wales, was, and as Mr Pimlott acknowledged, an intensely romantic figure, and around such figures, myths accumulate. Lord Archer compared the impact of the moment of her death with that of John F. Kennedy, the late American President. Others saw in her glamour, her pathos, her largely unacknowledged intelligence and, above all, her frustrated desire to bestow and receive love, a parallel with the film star Marilyn Monroe.

In its impact on the British public, her death seemed like a fusion of the two. "She looked," said ITN royal correspondent Nick Owen, "like all the movie stars you've ever seen." Yet at the same time, he said, she was like a lot of us would like to be — only magnified.

This paradoxical fusion of the glamour of a powerful politician, the untouchable allure of a film star, and the vulnerability of a woman who had, as she admitted, a great deal of love to bestow but was not quite sure what to do with it, lay at the heart of the outpouring of affection that was the British public's reaction to the news of the Princess's death.

In the earliest hours of the morning, tributes to her — touching, ugly bunches of all-night garage flowers with scribbled notes — began to arrive from those who had spent the night in the garish atmosphere of London's nightclubs, both straight and gay. Soon there followed repeated tributes from ordinary people who described, over and over again, a person they had experienced as "good", "kind", "the only modern royal" but above all, "full of life".

"I'm not a royalist but she meant a lot to me," said one young black woman as she laid a bunch of flowers at Kensington Palace.

"So beautiful, so full of life," said Ron and Margaret Hayes from Blackburn. It seemed a long way to come for a dead Princess with whom they had never had any dealings. "We've come to pay our respects," said Ron. "It seemed the right thing to do."

Many others, too, were overcome. Paddy Ashdown, leader of the Liberal Democrats: "I am speechless with shock at the horror and sadness at this terrible tragedy. My thoughts and prayers go to her family both near and far."

Bertie Ahern, Irish Prime Minister: "The Princess had won the hearts of the Irish people through her commitment and work on behalf of so many charities and international causes throughout the world."

Terry Waite, former hostage in Beirut: "I hope we shall get a universal ban on landmines, and that it will be recognised she had a major role and contribution in bringing that about."

David Mellor, former min-

Pimlott: remembered her as a human being

Archer: compared impact to that of JFK death

ister: "We have been robbed of a woman who could have done a lot of good for many decades, who was shaping our future King and to whom her children would turn as a necessary source of influence in preparing themselves for a rigorous public life."

Donald Dewar, Scottish Secretary: "Diana, Princess of Wales, touched all our lives in Scotland, as elsewhere in the country. She had so much energy and idealism. She cared for and worked tirelessly for causes where the need was great, bringing hope and encouragement to many in distress."

Ron Davies, Welsh Secretary: "She was held in great affection by the people of Wales. She worked so hard for the dispossessed and those in need. It is a tragic loss of a young life."

Alex Salmond, leader of the Scottish National Party: "She had enemies in the establishment, and perhaps in death they will now accord her some of the respect and compassion which they refused her in life."

Baroness Thatcher, former Prime Minister: "With the tragic death of Princess Diana, a beacon of light has been extinguished. Her good works brought hope to so many of those in need throughout the world."

Ted Heath, former Prime Minister: "People throughout the world will feel the loss of her compassion and her courage in dealing with their problems."

Betty Boothroyd, Commons Speaker: "I am deeply distressed to hear the tragic news and express on behalf of the House of Commons our great sympathy for her two sons and for all members of her family."

Viccountess Tansy, former Speaker who read the Lesson at the wedding of the Prince of Wales and the Princess: "We have suffered a grievous loss because she was unique. No-one ever contained so much compassion and care in one body."

Cardinal Basil Hume, leader of the Roman Catholic Church in England and Wales: "It is a sad end to somebody who has in many ways had a sad life."

Cardinal Thomas Winning, head of the Roman Catholic Church in Scotland: "Diana leaves a magnificent legacy of love and concern for people at the margins of society, not only here but also throughout the world. She was an extraordinary companion to people in distress. The world is a poorer place this morning."

Rt Rev Richard Chartres, Bishop of London: "I am distressed and stunned by the news. Having confirmed Prince William recently, her children will be particularly in my prayers as well as Prince Charles, her family and the relatives of all those involved in this tragic accident."

Lord St John of Fawley: "She had a charismatic gift of healing of which she was well aware and which she used devotedly and intelligently to help people. Her capacity for love, her charity, her concern were directed towards helping suffering members of the human race."

Henry Bellingham, former Conservative MP for Norfolk North West and childhood friend of the Princess: "The tragedy is that someone who had so much good to do in the world has been plucked from it."

Nick Partridge, chief executive of the Terrence Higgins Trust: "She was one of the first and most committed champions on this issue. It will be a struggle for the Aids community to come to terms with her death."

Esther Rantzen, television presenter and founder of the charity ChildLine: "She gave us personal donations when we started. She was in there right at the beginning. She met deprived children so often in private and she also made many public visits to promote our work to protect children."

Sir Jimmy Savile, television personality and fundraiser: "It's far too big a thing to have happened for us to be rational about it, and it will be days, if not weeks, before those of us who knew her will be able to come to terms with this totally impossible happening."

Liz Emanuel, who with former partner David designed the Princess's wedding dress: "We feel very privileged to have known and worked with her. Our thoughts are with her children and family."

Nick Gaselee, racehorse trainer whose daughter was a bridesmaid at the Princess's wedding: "She was unbelievably kind. We remember her kindness and her humour. She had a wonderful way with which everyone felt at ease with her which is why she was so successful."

Victoria Mendham, former member of the Princess's household: "I am heartbroken."

Robert Jones, the former Wales rugby union captain: "She took on the role of Princess of Wales very fiercely. The lads in the team always had great affection for her and people used to say we played better when she was watching us."

Michael Barrymore, the entertainer who spent 24 hours at Kensington Palace with the Princess recently: "It is a great loss for the world. She is irreplaceable."

The Archbishop of Canterbury at Manchester Cathedral yesterday. He said that the Princess's vulnerability was a source of strength

Carey recalls faith and devotion

Church leaders expressed concern at the role of the media, reports Dominic Kennedy

THE Archbishop of Canterbury paid tribute to Diana, Princess of Wales as a beautiful and vibrant woman whose vulnerability and weakness were the sources of her strength, passion and commitment.

As sombre worshippers packed churches where muffled bells rang in solemn tribute to the Princess, Dr George Carey urged people to pray for Prince William and Prince Harry, who, he said, would now grow up without a much-loved mother.

Leaders of the Roman Catholic and United Reformed churches condemned the apparent role of the press in the Princess's death, in "making money" out of her.

Dr Carey, who had had many conversations with the Princess, said: "She had faith in God, although she wasn't the kind of person who wore religion on her sleeves. There was a deep faith there."

He added: "I found her a very intelligent person, very committed to people and anxious to get to the bottom of things. I knew her as someone who loved life. She was deeply committed to people, to issues, to causes."

Dr Carey said he had been shattered to hear that "this vibrant person" had lost her life. "It is a terrible tragedy," he said. "She seized the imagination of young and old alike. This beautiful woman was also a very vulnerable human being and out of that vulnerability and weakness, her passion and her commitment to people."

"We are reminded through the death of a young person like this that death is only inches away from each of us. Perhaps it will help us to focus on the really important things in life, human love and relationships, and faith in God."

Dr Carey, who was visiting Manchester, lit a candle for the Princess at the city's cathedral and gave a homily on Psalm 23.

The Archbishop of Westminster, Cardinal Basil Hume, wondered whether the nation had exploited Diana. "Did we exploit this girl if I can put it that way, who is now no longer here to be exploited?" he said on News Direct radio in London. "There are some very important questions to be asked."

Cardinal Hume went on: "We need to remember that a lot of people have made a lot of money out of her over the years because the photographs cost money. They have sold newspapers and, as somebody said, this was an accident waiting to happen. We will need as a nation to consider how do we treat our public figures and what privacy do we give to them."

David Jenkins, Moderator of the General Assembly of the United Reformed Church, said: "Sadness will be coupled with concern over the apparent role of intrusive media in the tragic event that led to her death."

The Bishop of London, the Right Rev Richard Chartres, who was chosen to confirm Prince William, said that he was distressed and stunned. "Her children will be particularly in my prayers as well as Prince Charles, her family and the relatives of all those involved in this tragic accident."

An unusually large congregation crowded into Westminster Cathedral for High Mass.

Mother Teresa said in Calcutta: "She was a very great friend in love with the poor. She was like an ordinary housewife. She was a very good mother."

John Taylor, President of the Methodist Conference, said: "She brought to all her work a wonderful warm humanity which won the hearts of people right across the world, often in the support of unpopular causes."

Friends tell of the Princess's devotion to her young sons

By EMMA WALKINS

FRIENDS of Diana, Princess of Wales, were united yesterday in their shock and grief at her death. While heads of state across the world paid tribute to her charity work, it was the Princess's role as a devoted mother that her friends emphasised as her most special achievement.

Rosa Monckton, who had holidayed with the Princess in Greece only a week ago, said that she was a loyal and supportive friend. "We've heard a lot about the Princess of Wales, the public figure and I would just like to say that as a friend she was steadfast and loyal and whenever I had any setback in my life she was immediately there and would do everything."

Asked about the Princess's sons, she said: "I can hardly bear to think about them. They adored their mother and she loved them passionately."

"Prince William and Prince Harry must have every ounce of love that everyone can give them. She did everything from the heart. Her heart ruled her head which is why, I think, she was so often misunderstood."

The Princess had brought up her sons to see life not just "from the Palace" but "from the street", Ms Monckton said. "She tried to keep their feet firmly on the ground. She was grooming Prince Harry to be a huge support to his brother." Ms Monckton added that she and the Princess had been pursued by photographers on their cruise around the Greek islands. "When we were away she was very, very relaxed even though we were hounded by the paparazzi we managed to avoid them and we had five days of just being together and talking about things that mattered."

She thought it would be appropriate for the Queen to restore the Princess's status as Her Royal Highness. Although the Princess herself had not been bitter about the loss of the title on her divorce, the British public would regard its restoration as a suitable tribute, she said.

Left with their sorrow: the Princess's friends Rosa Monckton, left, the Duchess of York and Jemima Khan spoke yesterday of a woman whose heart ruled her head

Left with their sorrow: the Princess's friends Rosa Monckton, left, the Duchess of York and Jemima Khan spoke yesterday of a woman whose heart ruled her head

Left with their sorrow: the Princess's friends Rosa Monckton, left, the Duchess of York and Jemima Khan spoke yesterday of a woman whose heart ruled her head

The Princess had confided that sometimes lack of a title impeded her work when she was surrounded by crowds of journalists and photographers. She did not resent it. She had exquisite manners — there was no arrogance. She did feel the lack of it when carrying out her work. The Duchess of York, who remained a loyal friend despite recent strains in their relationship, was deeply shocked by the news, broken to her in an early morning telephone call from Balmoral. The Duchess is expected to return to Britain later today from her Tuscan holiday with Princesses Beatrice and Eugenie.

A statement from her office said: "The Duchess has lost someone she has always considered a sister and a best friend. There are no words strong enough to describe the pain in her heart. The world has lost the most compassionate of humanitarians and someone so special, whose presence can never be replaced."

Lady Annabel Goldsmith, a loyal friend to the Princess and wife of the late Sir James Goldsmith, said: "I am shocked and saddened by the death of the Princess of Wales. As a family we will miss her enormously, and she will be a great loss to the nation."

Lady Annabel, who became almost a surrogate mother figure to the Princess, added:

"At this moment in time my thoughts are with Prince William and Prince Harry, to whom she was the most devoted of mothers."

Jemima Khan, Lady Annabel's daughter and the husband of Imran Khan, was praying for the young Princess. "I'm horrified and lost for words. She was an amazing and remarkable woman, a loyal friend and a genuine crusader who did a great deal for others."

Mr Khan added: "I am deeply shocked and grieved. There was hardly any non-Muslim who worked in a Muslim country with as much devotion and dedication which Diana demonstrated for the sick and poor in Pakistan. Her death is not only a horrific loss for the British Royal Family but also for the suffering humanity in the entire world."

Elton John — who had become especially close to the Princess since the death of their mutual friend Gianni Versace — was devastated. He said: "The world has lost one of its most compassionate humanitarians and I have lost a special friend."

Camilla Parker Bowles, who is at her home in Lacock, Wiltshire, was "absolutely devastated". It is understood that her plans to host a fundraising party for the National Osteoporosis Society on September 13 have been cancelled.

Andrew Morton, whose book Diana: Her True Story first disclosed the unhappiness of her marriage, said: "We will never see her like again, and the appalling irony is that her death came as she was being apparently pursued by photographers. In some ways she was almost hounded to death. I fear for the press at the moment because there will be a massive public backlash over this."

'She could reach out and touch ordinary people just like us'

On a wet October day in 1981 the recently married Princess of Wales and her husband stopped in the town of Pontypridd near Merthyr Tydfil on her first tour as a member of the Royal Family.

If Diana harboured any doubts about the reception she would receive in the socialist heartland of South Wales, the people of Pontypridd dispelled them. The visit might as well have been yesterday for those who were there.

"I waited for four and a half hours in the rain," recalled Karen Drew. "She was wearing a burgundy velvet suit and a sort of pill box hat with a feather in it. Everyone was cheering. The rain was hammering down. There were so many people in the Market Square it was impossible to move. I only caught a glimpse of her but it was worth it. Even then we knew she was someone really special. I wouldn't have stood there if it had been Prince Charles on his own: she was the one we had all come to see."

The rain was one thing that hadn't changed as Mrs Drew recalled the Princess and their curiously parallel lives. She said: "We married in the same year, our sons were born in the same year and we divorced in the same year."

"I remember my father saying that she won't be changing nappies like you, but even though she was a Princess she was so natural that she could reach out and touch ordinary people like us."

Mrs Drew, at 38 two years older than Diana, heard of the tragedy at 5.30am when her boyfriend called from his night shift to tell her. Like many her first reaction was disbelief. Her daughter Samantha, 7, was old enough to

The crowds were drawn by the magnetism of the young woman on her first tour, reports Simon de Bruxelles feel the tragedy but too young to understand.

Mrs Drew said: "She kept asking me, 'What's it going to mean to us?' but you can't explain something like this to a child. Her death is going to leave a gap in our lives even if it doesn't affect us directly."

Lian Merry was too young to remember when Diana and her new husband visited the town, but she too feels personally bereft.

Miss Merry, 18, said: "I wrote an essay on her for my GCSE exam. I had failed it twice and this was going to be my last chance. It was around the time of the divorce and we were asked to write about someone we admired. I wrote about all her work for charity and the way she had kept her dignity. Afterwards everyone else said they'd written about their rums or their nans and I thought I'd gone up completely the wrong street but I can't have done because I passed."

Although Diana had not returned to Pontypridd, the rain-swept post-wedding walkabout has become part of the little town's history and a reason for its residents to take particular interest in her fortunes. Unfair, unfair was a word they kept repeating yesterday.

Mrs Drew added: "She was on the brink of finding true happiness. This thing with Dodi wasn't just a passing fancy. He was the first one since the divorce that Diana was happy for the public to know about."

"Of course she had affairs before, wouldn't you if you were locked in a loveless marriage, but I think this was different. It is so unfair. I just hope that now she rests in peace."

Jeff Jones, proprietor of J's Pantry, describes himself as a monarchist but fears the public may now lose sympathy with the Royal Family.

"She was the best of the lot of them and now she's gone," he said. "For us this is bigger than Kennedy, bigger than Elvis, bigger than John Lennon. It's bigger than all of them rolled into one."

"They will make a movie about this and it will be the weepy to beat them all."

His former wife Denise, now an employee in his café, said: "This could make Prince William bitter. He has already shown a dislike for having his photograph taken by the press and this could turn him against them completely."

"He is very single-minded like his mother and I am sure he will be very angry at what has happened to her."

Few in Pontypridd are yet ready to blame the press for the Princess's death. Media attention, said several people, came with the job and Diana had had the option of following the Princess Royal's path back into relative obscurity and decline.

Judith Male, 49, a mature student, spoke for many when she said: "She had a tragic life

Judith Male, left and Denise Jones in a Pontypridd café yesterday. "We all feel genuinely upset at the news of her death," Ms Male said.

Muffled bells sound ancient alert across rural England

By PETER MILLAR

THE length and breadth of rural England, Sunday morning congregations in village churches were stunned by the news of the Princess's death, some alerted to the tragedy by the most ancient, traditional means.

Philip Brown, deputy tower captain of bells at St Peter's parish church in Hook Norton, Oxfordshire, heard the news on his radio at 6.15 am. "My first reaction was: what terrible news and the second was how should we signal it?"

By 8.10 he had climbed to the top of the 15th century village church's bell tower and lowered the flag of St George to half-mast. Then, with fellow bell-ringer Nigel Slade, he set about the daunting and dangerous task of attaching leather muffs to the church bells.

"It was tricky because we'd had some guest ringers in the tower on Saturday afternoon and they'd left the bells up for us to save us trouble on Sunday morning," he said. Having the bells in the up position — upside down and ready to ring — meant the two middle-aged men had to clamber across the rafters to muffle each bell in turn.

"We didn't really know what to do, of course. But muffling the bells seemed the only answer. I don't think we could have rung them at all open. That would have scarcely have been proper. We're ready now to ring a muffled quarter peal on the day of the funeral."

Muffling church bells is the ancient village method of alerting parishioners to a death. The message got across, even to those representing more modern occupations. Keith Barnes, a car electrician expert who lives opposite the church, said: "I heard the bells and thought they sounded unusual, and said to Sharon, my wife, 'I wonder if someone's died.' Then we turned on the television and heard the news."

James Clark, a director of the village brewery, heard the news on his radio on an early Sunday morning visit to his office on the edge of the village. He immediately went up to the roof and lowered the brewery's flag to half-mast.

As an unusually large number of villagers arrived for the morning service, Mr Clark's father, David, remained alone in the church tower to toll a single bell for ten minutes. By then few needed to ask for whom it tolled.

ADVERTISEMENT

The Direct Mortgage

Now you can even transfer your existing mortgage without charge. CALL 0800 810 810 - FREE

0800 810 810 puts you straight through to Bank of Scotland Mortgages Direct® where you can have provisional acceptance of a mortgage in 5 minutes, and a highly competitive mortgage at that. Lines are open 8am to 10pm, 7 days a week.

Choose how much you repay. Choose to raise up to £50,000 capital.

It's called

PERSONAL CHOICE®

Here is the highly flexible mortgage that changes to suit your personal needs.

You can pay more when times are good, less if they ever hit a bad patch.

You already have a mortgage with another lender? No problem. For a limited period you can transfer your mortgage without charge. The solicitor's fee for the transfer will be paid by the Bank, provided you use the Bank's Panel Solicitors, plus the Valuation Fee will be refunded when your loan has been finalised.

Choose to suspend payments altogether within pre-set limits.

Choose to pay over 10 months instead of 12, making it easier to budget for special occasions — summer holidays, Christmas.

Choose to draw on emergency funds with a cheque book giving you instant access to capital for further advances.

Current rates are a very competitive 8.44% variable (8.8% Typical APR) and you won't even need to provide details of your income on a loan of up to 80%.

Bank of Scotland Mortgages Direct Product Summary

• No Arrangement Fee
• No redemption penalty
• Pay more
• Pay less or stop paying within a pre-set limit
• Capital raise up to £50,000
• Pay over 10 rather than 12 months
• Additional Funds facility of up to 5% of property value with cheque book
• Free re-mortgage package available for a limited period.
No income details required on loans up to 80% of property value

• No Arrangement Fee
• No Mortgage Indemnity
• Valuation Fee refunded when funds sent to Solicitors
• No redemption penalty
• Capital raise up to £50,000
• Cheque book facility available to draw funds when required
Free re-mortgage package available.

• No Arrangement Fee
• No redemption penalty
• Higher Loan to Value Access Fee added to loan
• Solicitors and Valuation Fee can be added

Does your current mortgage offer such a range of benefits? Compare them and see, then call us on 0800 810 810.

The 85% Mortgage offers opportunity to access your capital

With a preferential interest rate of 7.74% Variable (8.1% Typical APR) a Bank of Scotland 85% mortgage gives you the option of raising up to £50,000 capital when you transfer your existing mortgage to Bank of Scotland Mortgages Direct.

There are no hidden extras and there is no redemption fee if you decide to pay off the mortgage early. There is also a cheque book facility available through which you can access additional funds when you require them.

The 100% Mortgage

The Bank of Scotland 100% mortgage is ideal for first time buyers with little or no capital. There is a Higher Loan to Value Access Fee to be paid, but this and the cost of legal and valuation fees can be added to the loan. This frees up borrowers' own cash to buy essentials for their new property. The 100% mortgage offers a highly competitive variable rate of 8.74% (9.4% Typical APR).

BANK OF SCOTLAND MORTGAGES DIRECT®
CALL FREE ON
0800 810 810

All lending is subject to appraisal by the Bank of the applicant's financial status and valuation of the property. Full details and a written consumer credit quotation are available from Bank of Scotland Mortgages Direct, PO Box 12304, Edinburgh EH12 9DX. The Bank requires security over the property and house building insurance for reimbursement value. An acceptable life assurance policy is also required. To apply for a loan or mortgage you must be aged 18 or over. Bank of Scotland is a Representative of STANBARD LIFE, which is regulated by the Financial Services Authority, for life assurance, pensions and unit trust business. Bank of Scotland is appointed to sell all of these products. Typical example: A Personal Choice £60,000 Interest Only Mortgage over 25 years on property valued at £100,000 would have an annual interest rate of 8.44% (current Mortgage Direct Personal Choice Rate Variable) typical APR 8.8% and 300 gross monthly payments of £422.00 (net monthly payments of £392.35). MIRA's calculated under current legislation and may alter. At the end of 25 years £60,000 is payable. The total amount payable is £118,230 (this includes £120 for valuation fees and £50 for legal fees). Rates correct at date of printing and are subject to variation. The cheque book is not available on a mortgage of £30,000 or less. Bank of Scotland Mortgages Direct, Personal Choice and 85% are registered trademarks of The Government and Company of the Bank of Scotland. The option to underwrite mortgage take payment holidays, release equity from your property, are all available within a pre-set limit. Telephone calls may be recorded for security purposes and may be monitored under the Bank's quality control procedures. Bank of Scotland adheres to the Banking Code (1997) and adheres to the Code of Mortgage Lending Practice.

YOUR HOME IS AT RISK IF YOU DO NOT KEEP UP REPAYMENTS ON A MORTGAGE OR OTHER LOAN SECURED ON IT.

Visibly upset Blair talks of 'devastation'

By Philip Webster, Political Editor

THE Princess was the People's Princess and that was how she would stay in the hearts and memories of the British people, a visibly distressed Tony Blair said yesterday in his Sedgefield constituency.

The Prime Minister was woken shortly before 2am to be told of the accident. He was still awake when the news came through from the British Embassy that the Princess was dead.

He immediately drew up a press statement on the telephone with his press secretary, Alastair Campbell.

Mr Blair, who liked Princess Diana and, according to friends, regarded her as a "force for good in the world", was deeply upset. Four months after his election victory, Mr Blair was faced with an unimaginable national tragedy and knew that his task was to find the words to express the grief of the country. He spoke to the Queen and the Prince of Wales at 9.30am to pass on his condolences and offer any help the Government could give with funeral arrangements.

When Mr Blair arrived with his family to read the lesson at the St Mary Magdalene church his voice broke with emotion as he gave his reaction. "I feel like everyone else in this country today. I am utterly devastated. Our thoughts and prayers are with Princess Diana's family, particularly her two sons. Our heart goes out to them."

He had met Diana just before his recent holiday, Mr Blair said. "We are today a nation in a state of shock, in mourning. In grief that is so deeply painful for us."

Mr Blair continued: "She was a wonderful and a warm human being, although her own life was often sadly touched by tragedy. She touched the lives of so many others in Britain and throughout the world with joy and with comfort. How many times shall we remember her in how many different ways — with the sick, the dying, with children, with the needy? With just a look or a gesture that spoke so much more than words, she would reveal to all of us the depth of her compassion and her humanity."

The Prime Minister added: "We know how difficult things were for her from time to time. I am sure we can only guess that. But people everywhere, not just here in Britain, kept faith with Princess Diana. They liked her, they loved her, they regarded her as one of the people. She was the People's Princess and that is how she will stay, how she will remain in our hearts and our memories for ever."

William Hague was also at his home in his Yorkshire constituency of Richmond. Alan Duncan, his press adviser, called him at 5am.

Later the Leader of the Opposition said: "It has come as a great shock to everybody waking up this morning and a great sadness to all of us. She was a unique and very lively and attractive individual and so people will feel a personal sense of loss."

He went on: "But of course we should also pay tribute today to the tremendous work that she did for people involved with drugs, people with Aids and other diseases, for homeless people, for young people in general, for causes such as the arts... We should recognise that, and salute that today. She was a shining individual who will never be forgotten and I think that is how we should remember her."

break into their summer recess for a recall to Parliament, something Westminster authorities would wish to avoid if at all possible. The Welsh referendum is scheduled for September 18.

The Government would not want to hold the referendums on the same day. The logistical difficulties would be huge and ministers would not be able to use the expected successful referendum result in Scotland to give a boost to their less certain campaign in Wales.

Donald Dewar, the Scottish Secretary, announced the suspension of Labour's campaigning yesterday.

Parties suspend poll campaigning

By James Landale and Arthur Leathley

ALL main political parties yesterday declared a temporary truce in their campaigning over Scottish and Welsh devolution after the death of the Princess.

The Government and the Tories suspended all political activity relating to the forthcoming referendums in Scotland and Wales. The political ceasefire raised fears at Westminster that the Government could be forced to postpone the Scottish referendum, scheduled for September 11.

However, such a move would be difficult because the date is fixed by law. Any change would require MPs to

The mausoleum of Princess Charlotte at Claremont Palace. Murals and plaques have become more of the fashion as the decades pass

Searching for memorial that will last

Norman Hammond on making a place in history

AS preparations are made for the funeral of the Princess, the question of commemoration has already arisen. Whether she is interred with her forebears or as the mother of a future King, public sentiment will demand that she has a monument.

There will be a strong feeling that it should be more than the anodyne plaques that the Church of England has preferred in recent years. Britain's last royal monument is that to King George VI, in St George's Chapel, Windsor. That was deliberately modest in postwar restraint.

One comparable royal death was that of Princess Charlotte, daughter of the Prince Regent (later George IV) and his sole heir when she died in childbirth in 1817. Her monument is a towering embodiment of grief. Matthew Cotes Wyatt shows her body covered by a sheet, and two kneeling mourners also draped. Above and behind, the Princess is shown ascending to heaven, flanked by two angels, one carrying the still-born child.

Such marble extravaganzas are now out of fashion, but the Princess could be commemorated at Frogmore in a quieter manner, with a monument similar to the one there dedicated to Princess Alice of Hesse, Queen Victoria's youngest daughter and the grandmother of Earl Mountbatten of Burma.

She died in 1878, and over the next four years Sir Joseph Edgar Boehm created a fine monument which earned him the title of Sculptor-in-Ordinary to the Queen.

Princess Alice caught diphtheria while nursing her youngest daughter, Princess May, and they died within weeks of one another. Queen Victoria received the news on the anniversary of Prince Albert's death. 17 years before, and immediately decided that "our beloved Alice," should have a memorial at Frogmore.

The Prince of Wales, later Edward VII, suggested Boehm, and within three days he had produced a model showing mother and daughter clasped in each other's arms.

The Spencer monuments at Great Brington, one of the finest sets of funerary effigies in England, although they can be seen from the body of the Church.

A monument there would, however, bring the risk of a cult and undesirable floods of visitors; enough monuments, have been vandalised or even stolen from churches for this to present a real problem for the Spencer family, whose seat at Althorp is nearby.

Prince William of Gloucester, who was killed in a plane crash in 1972, has a dignified mural tablet at Barnwell in Northamptonshire, the family home, and some form of mural might be felt to combine modesty with feeling.

Professor Jean Wilson, a specialist in English funerary sculpture, suggested: "The best model might be the baroque or rococo tablets where a garland of flowers and leaves surrounds a bust of the deceased and an inscription."

Untamed TV

Explodes onto your television tonight at 7pm.

First Night programmes include:

Beauty and the Beast

Jewels of the Caribbean

Volcano!

Vanishing Birds of the Amazon

NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC CHANNEL

Call Sky on 0990 300557 for a special offer. Cable viewers - call your operator now to ensure you don't miss out.

The drive and inspiration of a born leader

Patrick Jephson, a former private secretary to the Princess, remembers nine challenging years that saw a unique combination of glamour and dignity

THE question I am most often asked, and used most often to deflect, is: "What is the Princess really like?"

As with so many people before and since, the first impressions I gained of the Princess of Wales were of her immediate concern for others, her energy, informality and friendliness. It was in November 1987 on a sunny afternoon in the drawing room at Kensington Palace and I was there to be interviewed for the post of equerry. She turned what could have been an ordeal into a pleasure and over the next nine years I repeatedly saw — and marvelled at — her ability to communicate the same warmth and concern to people of every background on her public, private and humanitarian engagements in Britain and around the world.

Her talent of combining glamour with the dignity and responsibilities of royal duties put her in an almost unique category. In recent years, it might be forgotten that for most of her royal life she shouldered a major share of the burden of public duties.

From the grandest State occasion to the most informal (and even secret) charity meeting she applied the same unwavering professionalism. She set the highest standards for herself and expected others to do the same. To work for her was to know that every success, however slight, was noticed and appreciated just as no oversight, however small, could be hidden from her acute and increasingly experienced eye.

The image presented to the world of beauty, poise and informed interest owed much to her natural ability and instincts. But these were far outweighed by the commitment she showed to memorising written briefs, researching personalities and a genuine desire to expand her own knowledge on a host of challenging subjects. Her courtesy was of the purest kind — it sprang from her inner conviction that those she was seeking to serve (and there sometimes seemed no limit to their number) deserved nothing but the best. And on the rare occasions when the courtesy slipped the reasons were more often to do with an unfairness suffered by others than by concern for herself. Indeed it was her impatience with what she saw

6 Despite her formidable concern for punctuality she would not hesitate to break a schedule to give comfort as injustice which gave those of us who worked for her the sense of being part of something uniquely worthwhile. After her office was established independently of the Prince's, (a process, incidentally, accomplished without ill-feeling contrary to some reports), the pace became even more intense as if she felt that every single day had to be used to the full.

We worked hard but she had the inspiration of a born leader.

Her attention to detail lay behind much of the great successes of her life. Yet despite a formidable concern for efficiency and punctuality she would not hesitate to break a schedule to give a word of comfort. How often I saw her lighten a solemn occasion with a spontaneous gesture of warmth or concern. A memo-table example was during the official arrival formalities at Budapest Airport, at the start of a tour. The President's wife, fearful with emotion on hearing her country's national anthem — played for the first time under a democratic regime — felt her hand taken by that of the Princess as they shared a silent companionship that overcame all language barriers.

Another and perhaps more typical example involved a visit to a children's hospice on a grey winter afternoon in an industrial town gripped by recession. Outside, she had a warm word for everyone who had braved the elements awaiting her arrival (never forgetting those whose shyness or even hostility kept them at the back of the crowd). Inside, she spent some of the last minutes of a dying child's life with grieving parents. There were no cameras.

A factor of her life, all too often overlooked, is her personal courage. Whether smiling on a rainy walkabout in Armagh, confronting (and shaming) hecklers in New York, putting her arm around a disabled leper in Nepal or outflanking an assailant who lunged at her on a sunny day in England, her composure and quickness of thought never wavered.

Such was the richness and diversity of her life that she leaves everyone — friend, critic or bystander — no shortage of evidence on which to judge her.

But those who knew her may remember with gratitude a figure of genuine stature, who was heightened, not diminished, by her moments of doubt and unhappiness.

□ Patrick Jephson was equerry then private secretary to the Princess of Wales between 1988 and 1996

The Princess with Patrick Jephson in 1993 at the laying of a foundation stone at Emmanuel College, Cambridge

Charity workload that ended with a happy day

By Emma Wilkins

THE Princess of Wales, had an unusually busy schedule planned for this month. She was preparing for a trip to the Far East to campaign on behalf of Aids victims, as well as numerous appointments to support charities in Britain.

This Thursday she was due to launch an appeal to help children suffering from asthma and Down's syndrome at the Osteopathic Centre For Children in Cavendish Square, London.

On the 16th, the Princess was to attend a charity dinner hosted by Bupa. The healthcare company had recently pledged support for Chain of Hope, one of her favourite charities.

On the 18th, she was to have attended a reception at the Serpentine Gallery, London, of which she was a keen supporter. The following day, she was to have been guest of honour at a lunch in London to support Jamaican children's charities.

Her major foreign trip this month was to have been to Singapore on the 23rd, for an Aids charity gala dinner. Her schedule also included a visit to Hong Kong for an evening fashion show in support of Aids victims. The Princess would have been the first member of the Royal Family to visit Hong Kong since the former colony was handed over to China.

The Princess had also pledged to continue her work for a worldwide ban on landmines — a cause dear to her heart.

Her love of children was highlighted by what was to prove her final official engagement, a visit to a new children's unit at the Northwick Park and St Mark's Hospital in northwest London. She spent nearly two hours there on July 21, between holidays in the South of France.

Michael Cole, chief executive of the hospital trust, said the work of the unit would carry on "in memory of her". He recalled: "She insisted on speaking to every child. She was very warm, compassionate and caring. It was an extraordinarily happy day."

Why the nation is right to share family's grief

There is always something distasteful about the public appropriation of a private tragedy. However much entire populations can mourn the death of hero, a heroine, a public figure, an icon, nothing can come near the searing grief of those really affected through blood or love.

For them, it is not a headline with the capacity to shock or a momentary horror, conveniently displaced by everyday considerations: it is a catastrophe on an ungraspable scale: one can't believe the world can keep turning. It does, of course, and that is both insult and — later — solace.

So while I believe that to snivel too loudly and too publicly about the death of Diana, Princess of Wales would be inappropriate, I have, for once, to admit to understanding why such convulsions of grief are, for so many, honest expressions of feeling. Just as when someone vital and close in one's own life dies, it is hard to take it in, hard to believe it is true.

And I don't believe this reaction is limited to those who sent wedding presents to the Prince of Wales and the then Lady Diana Spencer or those who line streets waving little flags when any far-flung member of the Royal Family struts by. However embarrassed they might be to admit it, I think everybody is affected by this awful news, touched by uncomprehending sadness.

I am one of those for whom royal-watching is, on a par with horoscope reading, both infatigable and intellectually compromising, and yet when I came downstairs yesterday and saw the paper on the mat with the words "Diana killed in crash" stretched like a gruesome banner over the page, I felt shaky, and I couldn't get rid of that shakiness.

All deaths are customarily reported as tragedies, and of course for the families involved, they usually are. But the death of somebody old, who has lived their life, is not a tragedy, it is a great, but livable-with sadness.

It is the tragedy of a life cut short rather than royal status that makes us so mourn, writes Nigella Lawson

The death of somebody young is impossible to get over: it is an offence, an assault on one's sense of what is right. The great anger one feels when a person dies prematurely is therefore justified, but as hard to live with as the grief. And maybe here I should offer the information, and I do so with some self-consciousness, that my mother died at 48 and one of my sisters at 32: in other words, I know something of which I speak.

Perhaps we are all susceptible to the tragedy of a life cut short and it is that, rather than her royal but more iconic status, that makes us so mourn Diana's death.

The American shock-academic Camille Paglia once wrote that it was Diana's two sons who, through the public agony of her dissolving marriage, gave her dignity and significance: her role, Paglia insisted, was that of mater dolorosa, with all the religious and symbolic connotations involved.

And it is they, too, that underline this tragedy, who pull it into an unbearable dimension. The lifelong weight of suffering to have fallen on the young princes, William and Harry, cannot be overestimated.

My generation has been

6 Diana has died at the same age as Marilyn Monroe. It seems hideously inevitable, as if she was always going to become immortal in the way that only such stars can variously criticised and praised for being a very child-centred generation. We have our babies late and then allow them to occupy a role in our lives that is markedly different from the way of life of our own parents. For all that we are savaged for neglecting our children, we are at the same time scolded for yielding too much to them.

The Princess of Wales may have been different from many of her contemporaries here: she married and had children a good ten years before the rest of us. But because we are all older when we have children, we are more sensitive to the fear of dying before they are grown up. Perhaps it is because of that, that her death has a particular poignancy for those of us the same age.

And perhaps we feel implicitly invited to share the grief of her death because we all felt invited to share her life. It is undeniably the case that she wanted to be part of everyone's life and that we are all fascinated by her, now more than ever.

But no one element can encompass it. Perhaps the chief sense of loss is the loss of all that light. Maybe this is to fall into the sloppy gushing of the fashion world, but every photograph of the Princess had so much luminosity. It may sound trite, but the future does seem darker. It is not just the dimming of the image that ensures that, but the fact that her worldwide fame made Britain shine more greatly. As I say, I am no royalist, but even I can see that it was her — not Oasis, Stella Tennant or Terence Conran — who made Britain glamorous.

It is hard not to notice that at 36, Diana had died at the same age as that other iconic blonde of the century, Marilyn Monroe. In that, there does seem something hideously inevitable about her early death, as if she was always going to become immortal in the way that only stars can. But the difficulty is that that isn't immortality — her certain future fame is as nothing compared to the extinguishing of her life now.

But it is true that there is something in the way of her dying that turns her not into a royal martyr but evokes more James Dean, Isadora Duncan, Jayne Mansfield, but most, as I say, Marilyn Monroe — those stars who burn too bright and who attracted the idea of that fatal myth: that they were too fast to live, too young to die.

Of course, conspiracy theories aside, Marilyn Monroe died by her own hand. That should make a difference, but there is something so full of pain and suffering underpinning the (self-perpetuated) image of Diana that the deaths do not seem so very different.

There are plangent similarities between the 20th-century goddesses. Arthur Miller wrote of Marilyn Monroe that no one had such a gift for life as she did, that she could come into a room and light it up, that her vitality transformed others. The same could be said of the late Princess, she who so longed for the reciprocated warmth of others.

And even those who castigated the Princess for her reliance on the press, who spoke critically of her sensitivity to her image, must wish that in life she could have read the loss-shocked and appreciative words that her truly tragic death has engendered.

first direct

Free from charges

Banking with First Direct is free because we do not charge Cheque Account customers for everyday banking transactions, even if you're overdrawn. And all our customers automatically receive an overdraft up to £250 — also free of any fees. So compared to other high street bank accounts you're better off with First Direct from day one. We're a member of the HSBC Group which is one of the largest banking and financial services organisations in the world, and in the course of a year you'll find we offer more cost effective current account banking. And the service we provide means you benefit in many other ways too.

By telephone, 24 hours a day

We provide the ultimate in convenience. You can bank with us at any time, 365 days (and nights) of the year, from wherever there's a telephone, in your home, office or car. And all UK calls are charged at local rates.

Personal and professional service

Every call is answered by our Banking Representatives. They have all they need at their fingertips to deal with your day-to-day banking needs. And when you require more specialised assistance, such as a loan, they can instantly refer you to someone who can help.

Getting cash is easy

Every Cheque Account customer receives the First Direct Card. This allows you to withdraw up to £500 a day from over 12,500 cash machines around the UK, including those of Midland. It also guarantees cheques for £100 and includes the Switch payment facility.

So is paying bills

Our service includes a free bill payment service. Simply call, tell us who to pay, how much and when, and we do it. This means you can arrange to pay your bills at the most convenient time without the need to keep having to remember to organise it.

A full banking service with more benefits

As well as our Cheque Account we offer saving, borrowing, travel and insurance services cost effectively by telephone. Take saving: our rates are always competitive, we offer transfers to and from your Cheque Account. So your money is always working hard without the need for you to do the same.

We work hard to maintain the service

The best people to demonstrate the quality of a banking service are its customers — 87% of ours have recommended us to their friends and colleagues in the last 12 months.

Opening an account is easy too

We also appreciate how daunting changing bank accounts can be. So we make it easy. Easy to open a First Direct account, then easy to arrange for your salary to be paid in and easy for all your standing orders and direct debits to be transferred to your account. And it's easy (and free) to find out more right now. Call us on 0800 24 24 24 or complete the coupon.

Why pay to bank when First Direct is free?

Annual current account charges (annual fees for up to £250 overdraft)
Lloyds Classic	£96
NatWest Current Plus	£60
Barclays Bank Account	£60
First Direct	£0

If you're paying more are you with the right bank?

0800 24 24 24
Call free anytime quoting reference BC752

or complete the coupon and post to:
First Direct, FREEPOST, Leeds LS98 2RF

Mr/Ms/Ms or Title _____
Surname _____
Forename(s) _____
UK Address _____
Postcode _____
Telephone No _____

The saviour spurned by the court

Alone in the Royal Family, Diana saw that the monarchy must adapt to survive. Thwarted in life, she may yet succeed in death — if Prince William continues her mission

One must not allow the lava of sanctification to harden. Diana, Princess of Wales, always hated pomposity, distasteful ceremony of the court, and had a gift for ordinary friendships. She would have found formal eulogies of her personality either tiresome or laughable. From the beginning we should try to remember her as she really was: a beautiful woman of her own time, resilient despite the many sad events in her life, an attractive and warm human being. She had real compassion for suffering, but also a knack for getting on well with all sorts of people. She was fun; she liked to laugh and to make people laugh; she believed in hugs and kisses, particularly for children and the sick. A lovely, friendly young woman has been lost to the world.

What mattered to her most was the future of her sons. When she married, she was very young, though her strong willpower must already have been present. Nobody nowadays would take on the role of the future Queen, which she very much wanted to become, without a real inner conviction. Quite soon she decided that she had something unique and necessary to give to the monarchy. She came to think that the Royal Family was failing to adjust to the postwar world, that its other members had lost touch with the age in which they were living and to that extent were losing touch with their people.

Diana's life cannot be understood without recognising the pains that she had suffered at each stage of her life. Her childhood was made insecure and unhappy by the separation from her mother; she hoped above everything for a successful and warm relationship with her husband and with the Royal Family. That too failed her: no doubt her childhood had made it more difficult for her to create the kind of secure family life she so much wanted. Suffering can, however, develop strength in those who survive it. Her ability to communicate with people who were sick, disabled or dying, and to give them comfort, was a remarkable human quality. She used that gift, as well as her fame in the world, to help the suffering. The unhappiness of her childhood also helped her to be an excellent mother: warm, loving, caring and, in an important way, serious.

Diana had great gifts. She was largely unacademic; indeed she rather distrusted intellectual interests in case they got in the way of her strong intuitive sense. She was, however, very quick; she could be unpredictable; she had an ability to foresee how the public would react; she was nobody's fool, though sometimes she was thought of as such by those who mistakenly underrated her. She also had a mysterious "star" quality which made her much the most famous member of the Royal Family in the postwar period.

She also had a gift which has played its part in Tony Blair's astonishingly successful career: she could instinctively identify herself with the aspirations of her own generation. The children of the 1950s and 1960s seem to have abandoned the universal hopes and schemes of earlier generations. They no longer believe in Utopian systems of socialism or in any other political theories. They put their energy for doing good into particular projects. Tony Blair was able to win the largest election victory of this century by his ability to represent these ideals. Diana's work to help AIDS or cancer victims, or to outlaw landmines, had the same appeal. She also represented the Royal Family's equivalent of the "new" in New Labour. She did not argue for a new monarchy altogether, but she did believe that the monarchy needed to adapt to the present. I am not sure anyone else in the Royal Family fully understands that, except possibly for Prince William, under her influence.

That is why the loss is so tragic, not only in personal terms, but in terms of national grief, though that will be profound and long-lasting, but because Diana stood for something important in British national life and there is, for the present, no one who can replace her.

There have been three stages of a constitutional argument in which she was largely right but the court usually opposed her. The first stage was the period of her early marriage, down to the birth of Prince Harry, in which the young bride saw increasingly clearly how the monarchy ought to develop but was pushed aside as an inexperienced girl trying to influence an ancient institution which was determined to go on doing things in its own way. There was also some jealousy of her celebrity status.

The people loved her.

The second stage, in the time leading up to the divorce, was one in which Diana was becoming increasingly effective with the public and increasingly aware of the issues about the future of the monarchy, but the cooling of the marriage and the eventual divorce were undermining her position. Some conservative courtiers were relieved when the divorce actually occurred; they regarded her as an uncontrollable "loose cannon".

They would not accept that their attitude was already out of date, and that she had a better instinct for public opinion, on which all monarchs ultimately depend.

The third stage has been the one between the divorce and her death. Again, at first sight, the cause she stood for seemed to have been lost. Diana was engaged in making a new life for herself. As a single woman she was enjoying a much freer social life; as a public figure she was making her compassion practically useful; she was continuing to be an excellent mother. Everything was beginning to fall into place.

Interestingly, Prince Charles was also coming to be seen as a more human figure, and public attitudes to the Royal Family were starting to improve. She was probably also succeeding in her plans to bring up Prince William as a thoroughly modern future King.

Nobody can yet say whether the death in Paris will have brought to an end the warmth and modernisation which was Diana's contribution to the history of the Royal Family. A lot will depend on how well Prince William is able to overcome the tragedy. He and Prince Harry have, in the most genuine way, the sympathy of the entire nation. Royal policy could now develop in one of two ways. It is possible that the court will make few changes, and that life at Buckingham Palace will go on as usual. In that case, the late Princess of Wales's attempt to modernise the Royal Family will have ended in failure. Things may change in Prince William's time, but that will be all that is left to hope for, and it could come too late.

Yet history does not usually work like that. It is shaped by great and tragic events. The courtiers will be as shaken as the rest of the country by the grief we all feel. They are human too, and subject to all the human emotions. When remarkable people die in old age, people grieve with gratitude for their achievements; when such people die in youth, people grieve with added pain for their lost hopes. The dead sometimes have more influence than the living.

The Princess hoped for a renewal of the monarchy and she did not want to wait for her son's time. She wanted it to be a strong institution, compassionate and contemporary. That was the core of her life's work. Her divorce at one point seemed to be the end of these hopes, or at least of her influence. Even that was not quite so. Her death could provide a new and powerful energy to advance her aims. She had been, I think, the most remarkable member of the Royal Family since Queen Victoria. She was sad, she needed to be helped, she was entertaining, she was lovable, but she was certainly not an ineffective figure in our national history. At the time of her death she was still maturing, and gaining in her understanding of the world; that we have lost for good, and it is a great deal.

A simple heart in a heartless world

Some despised Diana, but what could have made her bitter made her sweet

I took the Sunday morning ferry into Oban on the last misty, breezy, autumnal morning of the holiday. All we wanted were newspapers; aboard the boat they were a few days old, still bearing the reverent but endearing parazzi shots of Diana, Princess of Wales, attempting to straddle a jet ski while wearing flip-flops.

We had not turned on the radio, so it was odd to find the newsagent's full of people waiting for late editions and talking in hushed voices. Older still to see two big young men, with short hair and faded T-shirts, openly fisting tears from their eyes. But then, we were only a few paces from the souvenir shop which was run for years by Diana's mother, Mrs Shand-Kydd. Here, as in ten thousand other places all over the nation, the bereavement felt intimate. Local, even. Poor lassie, poor thing!

Reams will be written about the royal implications of this short life and untimely death, about its place in history and culture, the role of the media and so forth. But for once there is no need to turn to experts to assist and focus national mourning. We are all experts.

More than anyone of her age who was neither writer nor artist nor preacher, Diana handled round the essence of her self — and, generally for good motives. Sour commentators never convincingly nailed a charge of cynicism upon her. Every child she hugged, every patient she comforted, every recipient of a public smile, every heart she touched at a distance, was getting something real.

So to mourn her sincerely, even personally, does not require blindness or sentimentality, nor canonising hysteria. She was one of us. She wept often enough over other people's tragedies, so we do well to weep for her and her family. And to remember that Diana would also have expected us to weep for Dodi Fayed, and for the driver, and for their families too. Simple human mourning is the only appropriate response because despite the complicated, heartless worlds she moved through, Diana showed behind everything a simple heart. She once quoted some lines by the Australian poet Adam Lindsay Gordon, lines which she had chosen herself and which were sneered at by some commentators as "greeting-card stuff":

Life is mostly froth and bubble
Two things stand like stone
Kindness in another's trouble,
Courage in your own.

And that is it, really: the froth and bubble will subside and we shall remember the kindness, and some moments of courage.

I first got a close view of Diana's headlong determination to connect herself to other human beings several years ago when I chaired a meeting of Turning Point, a mental illness charity. It was not long after the garish revelations of Andrew Morton, and there was a curious frisson of over-intimacy about the occasion. As she mounted that platform — scuttling, head down, like a schoolgirl giving a vote of thanks — she knew that everybody had read about the marital failure, the loss of love, the bulimia and the suicide attempts. A lot of us, faced with such exposure, could not have borne to be looked at by a room full of strangers. Certainly not with cameras. Beforehand she was nervous, biting her lip, giggling.

But when it began silence fell, and we watched, fascinated, as the Princess deliberately used her own genuine misery and humiliation and confusion to offer comfort to others. She made it acceptable to have "lost it" for a while; she laughed enough to offer hope for every sad woman's future. Afterwards an extraordinary wave of warmth went towards her from the charity's staff and workers. We chatted about our sub-teenage boys and their computer games. My only private conversation ever with the Princess, therefore, was about something called the Barcode Battler which scored by reading supermarket price tags. That was her gift: 30 seconds with somebody and she was part of the mundanity of their lives, and welcome there.

After that, I watched with more interest as she visited hospitals, hospices, sick children, landmine victims and homeless shelters. Again and again and ever more surely, she produced the same effect: she lit people up, made them confide, offered them bits of herself, alleviated sadness with a human touch. Even to speak of it sounds gushing, but it is real: to the suffering, such contact is as needful as oxygen. Plenty of excellent charity workers do not practise such damp-eyed instant empathy. Pocket psychiatrists have opined that it was all to do with her own unhappy childhood and need for love. But what none of them can deny is that it helps, this spark of reassuring, personal, human contact and universal love. It is not the only way of spending your self for others, but it is a valid way. Simple hearts see that, so simple hearts loved Diana and always will. She enraged many feminists, who liked their women more combative, and some men who found her sweetness dangerous and feared its "manipulative" power. She was sneered at for her "Queen of Hearts" line on Panorama, then feared by politicians when the tide turned out — as in the landslide campaign — to have real power in it. But if you were ill or troubled or humble enough simply to accept what she offered, then there was nourishment in it. Nourishment which she drew, by time-honoured alchemy, from her own past griefs. What could have made her bitter made her sweet.

Libby Purves

So it was good this summer to see Diana at last enjoying herself, larking around in warm seas with a cheerful boyfriend, less stressed than usual even by the paparazzi, and apparently on cordial terms with her ex-husband. Once or twice it was desultorily suggested that I write about the affair, but I could never see the point: it seemed to me that there was no more public concern to be aired about the Princess. She would find a way to lead her private life, put the past behind her, continue with her charity work, teach her royal sons humanity. Her tabloid stardom would fade in time, leaving only affection and the occasional joke. That is what should have happened.

Now there is only the affection left. Its only right expression is in unashamed tears for her family, especially her sons. When the very worst things happen the simple hearts have it right: kindness in another's trouble, courage in your own. The rest should be silence.

Diana's death is a stain on the reputation of the press, but privacy legislation is not a remedy

Bastards, reptiles, vultures, vermin, sewage in the gutters of the press. If I were a paparazzo I would be keeping my head low today. The cameras that eulogised Diana's every feature, every movement, every activity, will be widely seen as having driven her into a wall. A comet streaked across the sky of public life and entranced the world. Such hysterical fame has reduced many to drink, drugs or suicide. Few have been so literally driven to their deaths.

After the grief comes the yearning for retribution. Nobody nowadays dies by accident. Blame is sovereign lord to every misfortune and demands swift recompense. That appears easily satisfied. The photographers who dogged Diana and Dodi Fayed for the past two months appear to have transgressed all professional constraint. They were insistent, cruel, and murderous. With them around, she had no privacy and no dignity. She was imprisoned behind a grille of flashing lenses. In a ghoulish rerun of La Dolce Vita, the lenses leapt from their bikes early on Sunday morning to snap the last, most horrific shot of all.

Yet blame has not done with hunting. Behind the ghoulies lie other denizens of this underworld. The editors, picture editors, circulation managers and bosses of the press have driven the market for intrusive pictures ever higher. Diana was simply the hottest property in the history of photography. A handful of fuzzy shots of her and Dodi aboard a yacht off St Tropez, syndicated worldwide, generated at least £3 million. This put a high price on the couple's heads. But photographers do not set this price. The cry of the freelance down the ages is the same: "I shoot what I see. The boss decides to print."

Having found its target, blame simply demands that "something be done". Yesterday a chorus called for that something. The last minister with responsibility for the media, David Mellor (who decided to do nothing), called for unspecified remedies. Yet behind industries are markets. And markets make less tangible targets. Whenever I hear someone complaining about the press "just trying to sell

No law could have shielded her copies". I wonder who buys these products. Who inhabits this market place, if not readers?

Buying salacious gossip about royals is like drink-driving and tax evasion: it is deplorable in others but not in oneself. Yesterday I am sure many a sermon was preached from British pulpits on the avidity of the public for news of the rich and famous. The exorbitant price for the pictures which yesterday's Paris paparazzi were seeking was set by an obsessive worldwide appetite for any news about the lady. If paparazzi are at one end of this sewer, at the other sits a salivating, prurient public. He among us that has no eye for such pictures, let him first cast a stone.

None of this can stem the cry for action. That a public thirsts for intrusion is not reason enough for supplying it. Free markets need regulation. Damage needs redress. There are many products which sections of society may enjoy but which public safety or the rights of individuals cannot allow. For years, British politicians and lawyers have been yearning to get their hands on the press. They now have a case history par excellence. The hounding must stop. It is lethal.

We should note first that the law has acted. The photographers concerned have been arrested. The harassing of motorists at speed and leaving the scene of an accident are crimes in all civilised countries. Trespass, theft and stalking are crimes in most. Chasseurs of the famous are trained in "burning off pursuit" and probably themselves break the law in doing so. That a law may not have worked in one instance — surely the hardest of all A.P. Herbert's "hard cases" — does not make it a bad law.

However, the implication of interventions from the Foreign Secretary, from Opposition spokesmen, from Earl Spencer and from others is that Britain now needs a specific law protecting personal privacy, distinct from the laws on trespass, libel and slander. The press will be told that it has not heeded the warnings of successive governments to "put its house in order". The familiar arguments will be taken down and dusted off.

It is now almost ten years since the Calcutt Committee reviewed these arguments. That committee, of which I was a member, shared the view of previous inquiries that a civil law of privacy could not be effective. Such laws exist in France,

Simon Jenkins

Germany, Italy and many American states. The French is one of the toughest. Reformers should note where the past month's gross breaches of personal privacy occurred.

All privacy laws tend to be effective in stifling small trespasses but not big ones. Calcutt pondered a graduated list of intrusions that reasonable people might consider fair "in the public interest", a phrase with many devious meanings. Those who are famous for a day, by being involved in accidents or court cases, soon return to obscurity. Some professionals, such as doctors, parsons and academics, appear more vulnerable to intrusion where their private lives infringe the dignity of their profession. Most people feel them fair game.

When we encounter entertainers, sportsmen and lesser politicians, vulnerability moves into the minutiae of private life. A rock star's marriage is regarded by most readers as news, even if it has no "public interest" bearing on his work. Drawing up a law to protect such people would be hard. Harder still is a statute to determine the rights of those who use the glamour of their private lives to promote their public ones. Prime ministers and royalty do this shamelessly.

Most people, which means most juries, would accept that public figures sacrifice some right to privacy by reason of their office. But how much? It is absurd to expect readers to consume only news fed to them by publicists, and not to hear if there is another side of the story. The misfortune of the fortunate has long been the essence of gossip, and gossip the essence of news. How far a newspaper should go is ultimately a matter not of fact, like libel, but of taste. Legislating for taste is notoriously hard. The present self-regulation may not show results in public — intrusion suppressed is by definition intrusion avoided — but I believe it to be the only feasible course.

Privacy is a choice anyone can make, even royal families. After the war, many monarchs decided to match constitutional diminution with personal discretion, for instance those in Scandinavia. The British Royal Family decided otherwise. From the 1960s onwards the monarchy marketed itself as a family entity, and the media responded to that invitation. I imagine that today more Swedes or Norwegians can name our Royal Family than can name their own. Even last year, when Diana announced her departure from public life, I think she benefited from a widespread belief that she was now entitled to a rest. The value of her "story" would diminish. Yet she later rescinded that choice and said that she would use her publicity value as an ambassador for Britain and her causes. This exploitation became hopelessly entangled in her private life. There may be a sub-editor in Heaven who could have treated last month's flight from Dodi's yacht to the Bosnian minefields as just an arms control story. The world media simply would not buy it.

No legal draftsman in a free country has been able to produce a privacy law that protects only the privacy that merits protection. There are laws in some American states that enrich lawyers and curtail legitimate press enquiry. The French law pays the famous (for instance, the Monaca royale) when a careless lens goes a breast too far. Privacy donations are part of the budgets of most French, German and Spanish magazines. Britain's proposed signing of the European Convention on Human Rights may enable judges to give some protection, for instance to minors and the sick. Such steps are unlikely to reduce the market price of royal photographs.

Nobody could pretend that yesterday's horror is anything but a stain on the journalistic escutcheon. Yet I cannot think of a remedy. It was a ghastly accident, part product of the appeal of any news about a British royal. This is a global narcotic beyond the ability of any one country to police. If British newspapers are banned from buying intrusive royal pictures, others will buy and import them.

The only relief will come when the victims of this market become less absorbing paradigms of human weakness. Perhaps with Diana's death, this process may begin. Stripped of her glamour, perhaps the Royal Family will become more ordinary — and less interesting. Perhaps royalty might settle back into a mode in which privacy is easier to attain. Perhaps, perhaps. These are but silver linings on the blackest of clouds.

A MODERN MIRROR

A Princess whose hopes and uncertainties captivated her age

Few are unmoved and none is now unknowing that Diana, Princess of Wales, is dead, after a car crash, with two others, in Paris. But the meaning of her life and death has hardly begun to be formed. We can grieve — and do grieve — for her family, her personal friends and for her sons most of all. The death of a young mother is always poignant; as is the deathly corruption of beauty, glamour, grace and a compassionate heart. But this column is an open, public place where only so much grief can properly be expressed.

In the days and months and years ahead the most famous of the Queen's end-of-century subjects will become an icon for the century to come. Some may deplore that fact. Others may hope to exploit it — to make the image or to manage the image-makers. What is certain is the fact itself. The life which ended yesterday will be projected well beyond the sadness of those who loved her and whom she loved, well beyond the very many words that we, and others, have found to write upon it today.

It is in the nature of royalty that its entrances and exits demand responses beyond personal indifference, sadness and joy. Kings and queens, princes and princesses are mirrors in which we see ourselves and our times. The death of a princess is a public death. The death of this Princess is a very public death.

The former wife of the Prince of Wales understood much of what mattered to ensure the country's cohesion. She appreciated the place of the Queen's family in assuring the nation's successful future. She saw the need for palace reforms and public reforms. She saw — mostly more in sorrow than in bitterness — the petty jealousies and territorial intrigues that undermined her power for good. To ignore what she saw because she who saw it is now dead would be a mistake of royal proportions.

More important still, she looked at the royal images of the past and understood the complex nature of the new royal looking-glass of today. She knew the shining surfaces that she held up to herself, the lenses that she loved and loathed with each changing day, the pictures that she reflected back to those who watched her all over the world. She was truly a spirit for her age. By images and appreciation she had made herself an unusually multi-faceted reflector of a fragmented and fractious time. Her intentions should not be lost because her eyes are closed.

Much of her life she led as a spontaneous sense of spontaneity. She preferred practice to theory, individual action to the collective or abstract. But she strongly represented some of the important conflicts of our time, the tensions between self-expression and opacity, self-absorption and the service of others, frankness and deference, the restraints of public responsibility and the claim that everyone has the right to a self. She was what she was; but she represented much more than what she was. For many people in this country she mapped their history in the past two decades. She made an impact upon the public mind more than any figure from politics or the arts. It is not likely that she will be forgotten.

Initial reactions yesterday ranged from resignation to rage. "Fate," said one wire-haired old man in a wire-wool tartan sweater as he spoke to The Times early in the morning by the Royal Bridge at Balmoral. To many traditionalists, and not just on royal Decades, the Princess had been a trouble and a trial. Yes, she had brought light and hope and gaiety to the House of Windsor. But the price had been too high and the comfort of dullness had to return. In that one word "fate" that one sincere subject mingled all those meanings of "sure to happen" and "sad, it happened" and "strength from its happening" that were felt around him as the news broke over the breakfast tables of loyal, royal Britain.

"Blood," said the Princess's brother as he described the hands of the photographers, editors and newspaper-owners whom he blamed for bringing about the death. "Horror," said callers to radio and TV stations who searched for scapegoats and found them everywhere but in themselves.

From the young Londoners who left breathless and breathless around Kensington Palace, there were tears: the Princess was a woman whose social origins meant she could never be everywoman and whose early induction to the Royal Family ensured that her life would never be typical. But, in her personal independence, her anxiety about her body and health, her difficulties in managing personal relationships, she was a focus in death and in life for many who projected their worries onto her.

Diana's bond with the suffering, reflected in her favourite photograph which shows her in almost Marian mode, was wholly genuine — and recognised as such by millions. It went beyond generalised concern and reflected a true spiritual identification with the pain of others. The esteem she earned from Mother Teresa was the mark of one who recognised a concern for those in anguish which went far beyond the merely emotional. If her activities had simply been motivated by a love of attention, or a need for occupational therapy, then she would have tired long ago.

The persistence with which she pursued her causes reflected a prompting which was genuine altruism. Although not pious, her conduct deserves to be called Christian. Tears were part of her own persona: the tears of the mourners yesterday, in cities and countryside throughout the country, were for feelings shared.

How should these emotions and memories become a force for good? How can the multi-faceted image become a settled beacon for good? The fatalism of her opponents is one too easy a retreat. When Archbishop Runcie spoke at her wedding of the stuff of fairytales, he seems now to have written merely the first scene of a tragedy, the moment when a young heroine meets the first signs of the destruction that is within her and will overtake her in the end. To some observers the second act has been the brief happiness which she seemed to have found with Dodi Fayed, the man of generous spirit with whom she died and to whose parents goes our deepest sympathy too. But to see a tragic pattern, to see a disaster that will somehow redeem the living, to see pursuing photographers as the Furies of nemesis is to imbibe romance. May such emotions quickly cease.

To see some practical lessons for the Royal Family is not so idle. Perhaps her ideals may be better absorbed after death than they were in her life. Her work went far beyond giving the Palace a more youthful face. She was continuing a powerful tradition. It was by taking a bold and active role in controversial causes, by making judicious symbolic interventions and advancing tolerance by personal example, that the Victorian monarchy affirmed its position at the apex of civil society, complementing but separate from those exercising political rule. That was the prime achievement of Prince Albert, another outsider, one who had the chance for greater success than the Princess, and whose early death recalls some of the wasted promise present in the country yesterday.

The place which Diana sought for herself and the causes which she championed aligned her firmly with that tradition. Her willingness to take a more proactive role than many royal patrons also recalled the efforts of Edward VII and Edward VIII. Both suffered for being seen to be too frivolous; both were animated by genuine social concern; both shaped attitudes by example. Edward VII's friendships did a great deal to encourage toleration towards Jews at the beginning of the century; Diana too helped to dissolve barriers of prejudice. She also recalled the example of another great female Spencer in politics — Georgiana, the Duchess married to the reserved Duke of Devonshire, who directed the power of giddy social whirls for the good of imaginative social causes.

Diana's landmine campaign had no precise precedent and caused political strain. But it should be seen as a development of the Victorian welfare monarchy rather than a mistaken new departure. The intuitive risk-taking of Diana, Princess of Wales, should not die with her. With care and goodwill, her legacy should help to protect the monarchy from its opponents. Without such care, of course, the sense of a family which drove the Princess into exile and only reclaimed her when she was safely dead could be disastrous. Not since the Abdication has the Palace needed sound heads as it does today. The nation will want a state funeral. There should be no impediment to this — least of all from the Palace itself.

As for the press, there will come a time when politicians can hear the bereaved and ponder any changes in policy that they demand. But that time is not now. Legislation almost never makes a worthy memorial. Fierce privacy laws are in force in France and did not prevent these deaths. To say that hard cases make bad law is to demean the anger of grief with the sanctity of cliché. But it would be disastrous if this hardest of cases should produce the worst of laws to impede journalists. And there is no good new law to be had.

The spontaneous outpouring of grief which has marked Diana's death shows how, even in her estranged state, she continued to play a real royal role, drawing significance from the family and institution which she never quite took as her own — and enhancing it. Her determination to use her unique prominence for earnest ends, to use the glass of fashion to magnify the suffering of others, lent grace to the monarchy. She helped to ensure that the public identified the monarchy with social purpose rather than simply Society. And, in affirming that, specifically, royal role, and in treating her membership of the institution as a vocation which did not end with her marriage, she communicated her own sense of the enduring importance of the Crown. By her public actions she showed she believed in and was a defender of the Throne that her son must one day inherit. That is how she deserves to be remembered. That is how she must be remembered.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

1 Pennington Street, London E1 9XN Telephone 0171-782 5000

Can press intrusion be blamed for deaths of the Princess and Dodi Fayed?

From Mr A. W. N. Probert

Sir, Four summers ago, the graduates of this college listened spellbound to Sir David Calcutt, QC, then Master of Magdalene, gave a talk on his work on privacy and the press. We learned of a scholarly work of great clarity of thought and impeccable legal quality. The final paper was very publicly launched by the Government and very publicly ignored.

Unless we are quick to redress this lack of legislation to ensure that no citizen is obstructed from going about their normal lives by any individual or body, be they press, obsessed individuals or even an interfering State, we will soon be bombarded with the next intrusive excesses. We are too late to deter the endless pictures of the Princess of Wales's tragic accident or the grief of the young royal Princess. Ruining people's lives can rarely be said to be in the public interest.

Yours faithfully,
ANDREW PROBERT,
Middle Combination Room,
Magdalene College, Cambridge,
August 31.

From Mr Don Leaser

Sir, My wife and I share the enormous sense of loss at the death of Diana, Princess of Wales, voiced by so many on today's television coverage.

Lord Archer of Weston-super-Mare, amongst others, expressed the view that she is irreplaceable in her work for various charities and in other areas of public concern, and surely in a direct personal sense he is right. Her untimely death will be felt in a very direct way, coming as it does at a time when she was beginning to establish herself as a major force in the world through the promotion of charities and other worthwhile causes.

It strikes us that both her memory and her work could be perpetuated in a most appropriate manner if her family were to agree to the establishment of a trust in her name, dedicated to supporting the kind of causes to which she felt herself drawn. Yes, she herself cannot be replaced, but if such a trust were to be managed by a group of those close to her and with a view to supporting charities whose aims were dear to her, surely this would be a worthwhile cause and a fitting memorial.

There will be many who would wish to contribute to such a trust, and it may be that a public figure who was close to her, like Lord Archer, would accept responsibility for co-ordinating its establishment.

Yours faithfully,
D. LEASER,
131 Marine Parade,
Brighton, East Sussex,
August 31.

From Dr Christopher Gardner-Thorpe

Sir, On this Sunday morning many are sharing the sadness of the families of Diana and Dodi Fayed. We must not forget the family of the chauffeur too. Nor must we forget those of the media who were following the car. Whatever the outcome of the investigations, the media will feel some responsibility.

The media alone cannot be blamed. Laws and regulations will not prevent public intrusion into private matters. Intrusion can only be profitable when public interest fans the flames.

What is needed is a change of attitude in us all so that each and every act of undue intrusion causes outcry. Those who seek to provide public leadership — politicians, churchmen and others — as individuals can shun the limelight and lead by example.

They can teach that too much public interest in private matters is improper and, perhaps most effectively, unprofitable.

Yours sincerely,
CHRISTOPHER GARDNER-THORPE,
The Coach House,
1a College Road, Exeter, Devon,
August 31.

From Dr L. A. Hill

Sir, The paparazzi would not hound people like Princess Diana unless they received financial and other incentives from editors and newspaper proprietors to do so; but also, editors and newspaper proprietors would not give them these incentives unless they could increase sales to the yobbo public by publishing the paparazzi's stories and pictures of the celebrities. We can therefore place the responsibility for the death of Princess Diana fairly and squarely on the shoulders of the general yobbo public.

Yours sincerely,
LESLIE HILL,
La Prairie, St. Mary, Jersey,
August 31.

From Mr Ian D. Shaw

Sir, The Sunday Mirror today includes a 40-page "special issue" supplement entitled "Personal — Diana and Dodi — A Story of Love". It contains dozens of photographs featuring Diana, Princess of Wales.

I ask the following questions, not expecting any replies:
How much did the newspaper pay for the right to publish these photographs?

How many of them were taken with the consent of those featured in them? Is there anyone in the media who accepts that at least some of these photographs were taken in circumstances which could be considered as an intrusion of privacy?

Do newspaper and magazine editors feel the slightest regret, let alone responsibility, for the events which preceded today's tragedy?

Yours faithfully,
IAN SHAW,
Trellis, East Road,
Stithians, Truro, Cornwall,
August 31.

From Mr Donald Winterton

Sir, I am sickened by even the possibility that among the first on the scene of today's accident — and still taking photographs — were those who hounded Princess Diana. Could the British press not agree to mark Diana's death with a self-denying ordinance — that for a trial period of one year they will print photos of the Royal Family taken only either at their invitation or at official functions?

Yours faithfully,
DONALD WINTERTON,
Wardrobes Cottage,
Wardrobes House,
Nr Princess Risborough,
Buckinghamshire,
August 31.

From Ms Jan Morris

Sir, At San Francisco a fortnight ago the immigration officer who checked my passport asked if I was connected with the press. I mumbled that I was, sort of. "In that case," said he, "I want to make a request. Please lay off Diana. The British Royal Family hasn't generally been very popular over here, but we love her, and we have to see her hassled."

Well, I retorted, God knew she often asked for it. He looked at me with sad reproach then, and today I'm sorry I said it.

Yours faithfully,
JAN MORRIS,
Treflan Morys,
Llanyswddwy, Gwynedd,
August 31.

From Mr John Leatham

Sir, In memory of Diana, Princess of Wales, perhaps schooling everywhere should make its first concern the instilling of good citizenship, courtesy and consideration, but above all respect for the individual and a high regard for each person's claim upon privacy.

Yours sincerely,
JOHN LEATHAM,
Flat 10, Kilmoreck,
Beaulieu, Hampshire,
August 31.

Help for MPs

From Mr John Szemerey

Sir, Peter Riddell puts his finger on one of the weaknesses of Westminster ("Out of kilter with the Commons", August 25) — the time MPs devote to constituency work and their consequent ignorance of key policies or actions being considered by Parliament.

The solution is not, however, for MPs to wash their hands of social cases and local problems: they need sufficient facilities and support staff to handle them. All MPs should have private offices with their own staffs who could deal with at least three quarters of constituency cases, mostly without even bothering the MP. Only the most difficult, sensitive or interesting cases need be referred to the MP, whose decision on what action to take would be carried out by the office staff.

Unimportant as such problems may be on a national scale, they are very important, if not vital, to the constituents who pose them. They must be taken seriously by the MP to whom they are brought.

The House of Commons must look carefully at what MPs are expected to do and to ensure they have the means necessary to do it. Clearly, this means paying them properly (our MPs are now among the worst paid in Europe), and paying for the personnel and other facilities they need. They would then have time for their parliamentary homework, for informed consideration and debate of draft legislation, and for questioning and controlling the Government.

Yours faithfully,
J. SZEMEREY,
76 Marubdun,
B-3090 Overyse, Belgium,
August 25.

Olives for peasants

From Contessa Passerini

Sir, I beg to differ with Mr S. E. Scammell (letter, August 26), who criticises others for "surprising ignorance".

The sharecropping system in Italy was officially declared obsolete soon after the Second World War. It lingered on where peasant families continued to live rent free in their landowner's houses; but the 50/50 percentage gradually crept up until the peasant farmer was getting 70 per cent of the crop and the landowner 30 per cent, and the system is now virtually dead.

Most of us small landowners pay braccianti (day labourers) to prune and fertilise the olives in the spring, and contractors to cut or plough in the long grass in the early summer. When the time comes to pick the crop in late November the pickers get a minimum of 50 per cent of what they pick in oil, which in cash equivalent could average up to £40 a day.

For those with small estates using outside labour, farming olives has run at a loss for many years; but the local labour force are not "doing very well out of it" either. Most of the pickers in our area brave the November cold and discomfort in order to have a supply of good, pure oil for their own kitchens, not to sell on.

Yours sincerely,
L. PASSERINI, Palazzone,
52044 Cortona (AR), Italy,
August 26.

Counselling has positive aspects too

From Mr David Anstis

Sir, Those who believe that we may have gained from counselling, based on the understanding of it as a process of empathy and discussion with an appropriately informed and experienced professional, should perhaps declare themselves and so offer the evidence which, despite its negative and generalised conclusions, the York University NHS report admits it seriously lacks (report, August 19; letters, August 25).

As one recently and abruptly shunted into widowhood, I found the local hospice an invaluable means of evaluating and resolving the enormous gamut of experiences a close bereavement can produce and which, it is clear, are also commonplace. Counselling cannot, of course, inject either fortitude or faith, although these may be induced along the way. But whilst violent death has become a familiar visual experience from the media, it is self-evident that we are today ill-equipped to deal with every-day mortality.

Our usual social procedures of goodwill and kindly hopes of the restoration of normality are important and always welcome. They tend, however, to skirt the real problems of expressing grief effectively and the need for personal reintegration that bereavement involves. Ideally, counselling can assist the bereaved to confront both of these successfully.

Yours sincerely,
DAVID ANSTIS,
1 Green Lane,
Chichester, West Sussex,
August 25.

From Professor Brian Thorne

Sir, In the same edition as you reported on the research study indicating the apparent ineffectiveness of counselling you carried an article on the psychological suffering of the nation's children, who are experiencing depression, anxiety and suicidal tendencies in unprecedented numbers.

As Professor and Director of Counselling at a major university, I am only too well aware of the escalating numbers of young (and not so young) people arriving in higher education with histories of almost unremitting misery. It is for me, however, a matter for some modest rejoicing that many of them, as a result of skilled counselling help, are enabled not only to benefit from their university experience but also to go forward into their working lives with new hope and confidence.

I have, too, the satisfaction of admitting into counselling-training each year persons of outstanding ability whose emotional courage and dedicated commitment to their clients is often awe-inspiring. The research study took the form of a supposedly extensive literature review, but its mainly negative findings are strikingly at odds with the many positive outcomes recorded by studies into counselling and psychotherapy which have been conducted on an international scale during the past fifty years. Nobody has ever suggested, as far as I know, that counselling and psychotherapy are a panacea for all ills but their usefulness in relieving psychological and emotional pain is beyond question.

I sometimes wonder if it is because counsellors and psychotherapists see only too clearly the vested interests that contribute to the creation of a dysfunctional society that they are often dismissed as incompetent manipulators or worse.

Yours faithfully,
BRIAN THORNE,
(Professor and Director of Counselling, University of East Anglia at Norwich),
As from: 14 Salter Avenue,
Norwich, Norfolk,
August 26.

A little wildness . . .

From Mr Mark Dunn

Sir, I was murmuring a blessing on John Brookes and his Liberation Theology for Gardeners (letter, August 27) until I came to his final paragraph: "Wild plants cannot be allowed to grow at random . . .", in which the sunlit vision of future Saturdays spent idling in the flowery bosom of unrestricted Nature is so rudely crushed.

But the glimpse of an Elysian future lingers on. Surely within the new, naturally laid-out swaths of native planting there is room for some truly unlettered savagery. It is there, where trowel and hoe, clippers, string and spray are never seen, that I learn for a gardener's eternal reward: far from the voice of the conscientious head gardener and her puritan calls for order and for the unending restraints of Nature and her army of innocent weeds.

Yours ever, and in sorrow,
MARK DUNN,
Wildham, Stoughton,
Chichester, West Sussex,
August 28.

Letters may be faxed to 0171-782-5046,
e-mail to: letters@the-times.co.uk

In defence of scientists

From Sir Arnold Wolfendale, FRS

Sir, So, Sir Hermann Bondi — cosmologist turned administrator — thinks that the number of researchers in science in universities should be cut in half (report and leading article, August 26; also letter, August 19). Here we have a good example of "Cosmology is often wrong, but never in doubt".

No, Sir Hermann, the problem is not the numbers as such but rather "the system". For many young university researchers the final objective should be a post in industry, commerce or education outside the university rather than, as at present, a university appointment. A number of post-doctoral years of university research, with its excellent training and the possibility of satisfying the perhaps once-in-a-lifetime yearning to make a breakthrough, is a fine preparation for the undoubted rigours of the outside world.

Bondi has the opportunity now to "get in there" and organise a sea-change of attitudes — and incidentally, with his well-known skills, to get more funds.

Yours sincerely,
ARNOLD WOLFENDALE,
University of Durham,
Department of Physics,
Science Laboratories,
South Road, Durham,
August 28.

From Professor Denis Noble, FRS

Sir, The Office of Science and Technology's "Forward Look" for 1995 quotes the numbers of qualified scientists and engineers engaged in research and development per 10,000 of the labour force. While Japan, the US and Germany have around 70, the UK languishes at 45 and is at the bottom of the league in support provided per academic scientist.

It is a miracle that Britain's scientists achieve the successes they do with such resources. Your leading article might at least have acknowledged that the OECD figures show that the UK is the only major country showing a fall in total research and development expenditure as a fraction of GDP over the period 1981 (the first year such statistics were produced) to 1993.

Yours sincerely,
DENIS NOBLE,
University of Oxford,
University Laboratory of Physiology,
Parks Road, Oxford,
August 27.

Ask a silly question . . .

From Mr Peter Gordon

Sir, My son, who recently graduated with a good degree, was interviewed for a job with a multinational company. During the course of the interview he was asked by one of two interviewers, what piece of furniture he would like to be. He responded: "An easy chair."

He didn't get the job. Is that because he was asked a stupid question or because he gave a silly answer? Or is there more to employment psychology than meets the eye?

Yours etc,
PETER GORDON,
62a Christchurch Road,
Bournemouth, Dorset,
August 25.

COURT CIRCULAR

BALMORAL CASTLE
August 31: The Queen and the Prince of Wales with other members of the Royal Family learned this morning with great sadness of the death of Diana, Princess of Wales.

Divine Service was later held in Crathie Parish Church. The Reverend Adrian Varwell preached the sermon.

CLARENCE HOUSE
August 30: The Lady Margaret Colville has succeeded Lady Penn as Lady in Waiting to Queen Elizabeth The Queen Mother.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint Admiral Sir Michael Layard to be Gentleman Usher to the Sword of State on the retirement of General Sir Edward Burgess.

Forthcoming marriages

Mr R.J.W. Bedford and Mrs E.C. Stenwick
The engagement is announced between Rupert, eldest son of Mr and Mrs Peter Bedford, of Harrier, Hampshire, and Emma, daughter of Mr and Mrs David Hooper, of Mapledurwell, Hampshire.

Mr M.D. Dwyer and Mrs E.S. Gouldsmith
The engagement is announced between Michael, eldest son of Mr and Mrs Peter Dwyer, of Murrumbidgee, Australia, and Fiona, younger daughter of Mr and Mrs Anthony Gouldsmith, of Burrington, Bristol.

Flying Officer G.E. Hall and Pilot Officer M.E. Archer
The engagement is announced between Geoffrey, second son of the Rev and Mrs H. Hall, of Sutterton, Lincolnshire, and Mandy, youngest daughter of Gillian and John Archer, of Kington, Warwickshire.

Mr J.D. Kyd and Mrs M.C. Laws
The engagement is announced between David, son of the late Mr John P. Kyd and of Mrs J.P. Kyd, of Stratford, Perthshire, and Mary, elder daughter of the late Mr Peter Laws and of Mrs J. Harford and stepdaughter of Mr F. Harford, both of Ottawa, Canada.

Mr A.J. Smith and Mrs A.H. Brewster
The engagement is announced between Andrew, son of Mr Peter Smith, of Johannesburg, and Mrs Anna Brewster, of Liss, Hampshire, and Helen, daughter of Colonel and Mrs Donald Brewster, of Strorrington, West Sussex.

Anniversaries

BIRTHS: Edward Allen, actor-manager, founder of Dulwich College, London, 1866; Edgar Rice Burroughs, novelist, creator of Tarzan, Chicago, 1875.

DEATH: Nicholas Breakspere, Pope Adrian IV 1154-59, Anagni, Italy, 1159.

The night sky in September

By MICHAEL J. HENDRIK
ASTRONOMY CORRESPONDENT

MERCURY is a morning star rising by 04h or nearly two hours before the Sun by mid-month. It is at greatest western elongation (18 degrees) on the 16th, and brightens from 0 to -1 magnitude during the last two weeks of September. It should be visible very low in the east at dawn during the third week of the month.

Venus is an evening star but sets only an hour after the Sun throughout the month. However, at -4.1 magnitude it may be visible in the west just after sunset if the sky is very clear. Venus passes just to the north of Spica on the 5th-6th, Crux on the 10th to the north on the 13th-14th.

Mars is also in the evening sky setting an hour-and-a-half after the Sun but, at 1.1 magnitude, it might just be seen low in the west. It passes from Libra into Scorpio late in the month. Moon to the north on the 6th-7th.

Jupiter is in Capricornus and a brilliant -2.7 magnitude, being in the south at dusk and setting by 01h by the 30th. OBSE, will be held at 11am on Monday, September 29, at the Chapel of the Royal Hospital, Chelsea.

Sir Charles Graham
A service of thanksgiving for the life of Sir Charles Graham will be held in the Chapel of the Royal Hospital, Chelsea, on Thursday, October 16, at 3pm. Tickets may be applied for, by September 16, from the Curatorial Liaison Office, The Courts, Carlisle, CA3 8LZ.

Birthdays today
Mr David Bainton, cricketer, 46; Mr D.A. Baldwin, former chairman of the board, Hewlett-Packard, 61; Sir Kenneth Bradshaw, former Clerk of the House of Commons, 75; Mr Alan Carr, former senior partner, Stammers & Stammers, 61; Professor Sir David Carter, clinical surgeon, 57; Professor Ronald Cooke, Vice-Chancellor, York University, 56; Mr Joe Earle, arts management consultant, 45; Miss Gloria Estefan, singer, 40; Mr Gwynfor Evans, honorary life president, Eisteddfod, 85; Mrs Margaret Evans, MP, 52; the Marquess of Easington, 62; Air Chief Marshal Sir Robert Freer, 74; Mr Barry Gibb, singer, 54; Mr Russ Gullit, football player-manager, 35.

Mr Allen Jones, artist, 60; the Earl of Lisleburn, 79; Lord O'Neill, 64; Baroness Park of Monmouth, 76; Lord Parkinson, 66; Sir Austin Pearce, former chairman, British Aerospace, 76; Mr Donald Piggott, former director-general, British Red Cross Society, 77; Mr Manuel Pinero, golfer, 48; Lord Riverside, 96; Mr Milton Shulman, film and theatre critic, 79.

School news

Aiglon College
Term begins on Sunday, September 7. School Governors are David Cruickshank and Dominique Ellery. The first Aiglon Education Forum Strategic Planning will take place from September 5-7. Cultural Long Expeditions leave on October 15 and the concert at Parents' Weekend, November 7-8, will be at the Aiglon Centre. The Carol Service will be on Sunday, December 12 and term ends on December 13.

Bewick School
School convenes today for the Michaelmas Term. The choir and orchestra will perform on Thursday, October 9. The major musical production will be performed on November 12, 13, 14 and 15. The house of school are Paul Miller and Emma Silby. Term ends with the carol service on Friday, December 12.

Cheltenham College
Term begins today at Cheltenham College, under the headmastership of Mr Paul Chamberlain, and ends on Friday, December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

Cheltenham Ladies' College
The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

Cheltenham Ladies' College
The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

Cheltenham Ladies' College
The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

Cheltenham Ladies' College
The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

Cheltenham Ladies' College
The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

Cheltenham Ladies' College
The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

Cheltenham Ladies' College
The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

Cheltenham Ladies' College
The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

Cheltenham Ladies' College
The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

Cheltenham Ladies' College
The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

Cheltenham Ladies' College
The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

Cheltenham Ladies' College
The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

Cheltenham Ladies' College
The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

Cheltenham Ladies' College
The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

Cheltenham Ladies' College
The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

Cheltenham Ladies' College
The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

Cheltenham Ladies' College
The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

Cheltenham Ladies' College
The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

Cheltenham Ladies' College
The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

Cheltenham Ladies' College
The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

Cheltenham Ladies' College
The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

The diagram shows the brightest stars that will be above the horizon in the latitude of London at 23h (11 pm) at the beginning, 22h (10 pm) at the middle, and 21h (9 pm) at the end of the month. Local mean time. A1 places stars from the Greenwich meridian at the Greenwich time at which the diagram applies are later than the above by one hour for each 15 deg west of Greenwich and earlier by a like amount if the place is east. The map should be turned so that the horizon of the observer is facing shown by the words around the circle is at the bottom, the zenith being at the centre. Greenwich Mean Time, known as Universal Time, is shown by the numbers around the circle. The partial eclipse of the Sun on the 13th-14th is shown by the words around the circle. The partial eclipse of the Sun on the 13th-14th is shown by the words around the circle.

The total eclipse of the Moon, which occurs on the 16th, is visible from Asia, Africa, Europe and Australia. The Moon enters the umbra at 17h 00m, totality begins at 18h 15m, with mid-eclipse at 18h 45m. Totality ends at 19h 15m and the Moon leaves the umbra at 20h 15m.

The eclipse is not very favourable for observers in the British Isles because the Moon will not rise until about the time totality begins and it will not be really dark until after totality ends.

The synodic, or lunar, month is 29.53 days long from full Moon to full Moon. Dividing this number into 365 days gives between 12 and 13 lunations each year. However, the intervals between new, first, quarter, full, last quarter and new again are not exactly one quarter of 29.53 (or 7.38 days).

The main reason for this is that the Moon's orbit round the Earth is elliptical not circular. So the Moon is sometimes ahead and sometimes behind the position in relation to the Earth and Sun needed to divide the lunar month into four equal quarters.

From full Moon to full Moon takes 29.53 days, but the second full Moon will not be in quite the same part of the sky in which it was a month earlier. The Moon is full in these two days the Moon will have travelled eastwards against the stars: it moves eastwards by about its own diameter every hour, 13 degrees a day, or another 29 degrees by the end of the lunation.

A glance at the monthly charts shows that successive full Moons do, indeed, occur about 30 degrees further east. In a little under 12 months, the Moon will have completed 13 eastward circuits of the stars. The odd days ensure that the dates of the Moon's phases do not repeat themselves each year. However, as 19 years of 365.25 days is nearly equal to 235 lunations of 29.53 days, it follows that, if a full Moon occurs on a certain date, there will be a full Moon on the same date 19 years later. This is called the Metonic cycle.

The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

The Autumn Term begins today with a record number of pupils in the school. East House opens as a Sixth Form boys' house. The Senior Play will be on November 13, 14 and 15, and term ends with the Carol Service on December 12. The school is the Senior College. Prefect: his three deputies are Ed Chamberlain, Laura Little and Angus Mathers. Old Cheltenham Day will be on Saturday, November 8.

Marriages

Mr A.J. Perham and Miss A.E.M. Napier
The marriage took place on Saturday at St Mary's Church, Northampton, of Mr and Mrs Perham, eldest son of Dr and Mrs Perham, of Plymouth, Devon, to Miss Arminia Napier, younger daughter of the late Hon. Greville Napier and Mrs Napier, of Treford, West Sussex. The Rev David Gibbons officiated.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, Sir Ranulph Twisleton-Wykeham-Fiennes, was attended by Mrs Lucilla Ferard, Miss Flora Perham and Mrs Tania Shepherd. Mr Tom Wood was best man.

A reception was held at Elsted Hall and the honeymoon will be spent in Australia.

Mr M.J. Wade and Dr C.S. Dashwood
The marriage took place on Saturday at the Church of St Lawrence, West Wycombe, of Mr Michael Wade, only son of Mr and Mrs Peter Wade, of Sutton, Surrey, to Dr Caroline Dashwood, youngest daughter of Sir Francis Dashwood, of West Wycombe Park, Buckinghamshire. The Rev Pat Gillham officiated, assisted by the Rev Martin Gillham and Canon Jeremy Davies.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was attended by J.J. Napier, Victoria Dashwood, Sara Duggan and Frederick Weid. Mr George Cruddas was best man.

A reception was held at the home of the bride and the honeymoon will be spent in Italy.

Mr A.G.H. Steward and Miss L.C. Mahon
The marriage took place on Saturday at St Mary's Church, Worpleston, Surrey, of Mr Alexander Steward, son of Mr Geoffrey Steward, of Kensington, to Miss Lucy Mahon, daughter of Sir William and Lady Mahon, of Worpleston. Canon J.G.M.W. Murphy officiated.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was attended by Evvina and Rosabelle Lorne, and Henry and Jack Stroud. Mr Tom Davies was best man.

A reception was held at the home of the bride and the honeymoon will be spent abroad.

Mr C.R. Boyle and Miss L.J. Shaw
The marriage took place on Saturday at Cranston Church, Pathhead, Midlothian, of Mr Charles Boyle, son of Mr John Boyle, of London, SW10, and of Lady Barber, of Ingleton, Berkshire, to Miss Laura Shaw, daughter of the late Mr John Shaw and of Mrs Jean Shaw, of Edinburgh. The Rev Peter Gardner officiated.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was attended by Miss Nicola Flynn, Miss Jane Peck and Miss Lynn McQuinn. Mr Patrick Boyle was best man, and a reception was held at Oatland Castle, Pathhead.

Mr R.B. Charlton and Miss G.V.L. Kelly
The marriage took place on Saturday at St Andrew's Church, Harbury, Northumberland, of Mr R.B. Charlton, son of Mr R.B. Charlton, of Linnel Wood, Northumberland, and Ms Georgina Cruddas, of Stalybridge, Cheshire, to Miss Georgina Kelly, daughter of Sir David and Lady Kelly, of Stanton Farm, Northumberland. Canon R.H.C. Symon officiated.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was attended by Miss Chloé Kelly, Miss Daisy Kelly and Miss Francesca Kelly. Mr Andrew Ingalls was best man.

A reception was held at the home of the bride and the honeymoon will be spent in the Republic of Ireland.

Mr P.E. Carter and Miss T.S. Simister
The marriage took place on Saturday, August 30, 1997, at St Etheldreda's, Ely Place, between Mr Patrick Carter and Miss Trudi Simister. The honeymoon will be spent in Italy.

Mr B.R. Cornish and Miss D.M. Ellis
The marriage took place on Saturday, August 30, at All Saints' Church, Steep, between Mr Brian Cornish, son of the late Mr and Mrs Richard Cornish, of Exeter, and Miss Diana Ellis, daughter of Mr and Mrs Clive Ellis, of Petersfield, Hampshire. The Rev Tom Hiney, MC, officiated.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was attended by Miss Rhona Holliday. Mr John Child was best man.

A reception was held at Bedales and the honeymoon is being spent in Botswana.

Mr N. Cunningham-Reid and Mrs W. Seely
The marriage took place on Saturday, August 30, 1997, at Llanged Hall, Powys, Wales, of Mr Noel Cunningham-Reid and Mrs Wendy Seely.

Mr T. Russell and Professor K. Morie
The marriage took place on August 30 at Wellington Hall, Cheshire, between Mr Tony Russell and Professor Kate Morie.

Mr S.G.T. Willis and Miss M.C.A.L. Brumie
The marriage took place on Saturday, August 30, at the Church of St. Mary del Mar, London, of Mr Simon Willis, son of Mr and Mrs Simon Willis, of Seale, Surrey, to Miss Marie-Christine Brumie, daughter of M and Mrs Gérard Brumie, of Paris. Mostyn Joan Cross officiated.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was attended by Lucy Butler-Sloss, Flora de Falco, Emily Kendall, Flora Goodman and Alexander Peart. William Kendall, Robert Noel, Ariane Audouard and Arielle Parumade were bridesmaids.

A Church of England service of dedication, at which the Rev Nigel McGregor officiated, was later held at the Castell de Penrhall and a reception followed. The honeymoon will be spent in India.

BMDS: 0171 680 6880
PRIVATE: 0171 481 4000

PERSONAL COLUMN

TRADE: 0171 481 1982
FAX: 0171 481 9313

BIRTHS
BIRNTH: Edward Allen, actor-manager, founder of Dulwich College, London, 1866; Edgar Rice Burroughs, novelist, creator of Tarzan, Chicago, 1875.

OBITUARY

DIANA, PRINCESS OF WALES

Diana, Princess of Wales, died yesterday after a car crash in Paris aged 36. She was born at Park House, Sandringham, on July 1, 1961.

Not since the heyday of Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis had there been an international icon to match Diana, Princess of Wales. Her picture on the cover of magazines was enough to guarantee sales worldwide, and no personality in history was ever the subject of more unremitting attention on the part of the paparazzi. In that sense, the fact that she should have met her death — with her new boyfriend Dodi Fayed — while apparently seeking to escape a motorcycle pursuit by photographers carries its own cruel irony along with it.

In an age when stars have become drabber and more ordinary, she achieved unrivalled glamour and respect. She developed from being a relatively unprepossessing kindergarten teacher into a stylish and beautiful young woman, always well dressed, and beloved for her gentle and loving nature.

The most successful princesses in history have been those who loved children and cared for the sick. The Princess enjoyed a natural affinity with both children and the sick. She devoted much energy to their care, in a way entirely in tune with the age. Her warmth and kindness found many outlets, particularly in regard to those struck down with HIV. She was spontaneous in manner, happily ignoring royal protocol to bestow a kiss on a child in the crowd, and writing letters to members of the public signed "love Diana".

Almost from the day she emerged into public life, the British people took her to their hearts. She brought to the Royal Family not only her very English beauty, but the enthusiasm of youth, combined with an innate dignity and a good-natured sense of humour.

She was not an intellectual: neither a good passer of exams nor a noted reader. But she possessed a canny and straightforward form of common sense. She listened and she learnt, and whereas she may have found her school days boring, she relished her role as Princess of Wales. She loved fashion and dancing, and pop stars and groups such as Phil Collins and Spandau Ballet. In the early years of her marriage she was as excited at meeting stars like Elizabeth Taylor as they were to meet her.

Though she was born into the far from stimulating world of the conventional upper-class girl, reared in the country of Norfolk and Northamptonshire and veering in youth towards the world of the "Sloane Ranger", her character had great possibilities for development, and she did, into a figure of international importance, confident of her place on the world stage.

She was given little support. It would seem, by her own family or that into which she married. Perhaps one of the reasons that the British public loved her as they did was that they always feared for her, and were concerned that she might be unhappy, while admiring her for being a fighter who refused to give up in the face of adversity.

The world's press loved her, too. Newspapers built her up into the epitome of a fairy-tale princess. Occasionally they were fickle and turned on their creation, but it was generally more comfortable to let the world love her, and their onslaughts were accordingly short-lived. The press interest was relentless, however, and it began long before the engagement was in any sense firm. After her marriage, her every movement, her every outfit, her every mood, was the excuse for many column inches of press comment. She was a natural joy for photographers, being both photogenic and having an innate understanding of the needs of journalists. Her face could sell a million copies of any publication, and both they and she knew it. She adorned a magazine cover by editor's choice, and once, memorably, that of Vogue by her own wish.

In this great love for a public figure there was bound to lurk danger. When she flourished the press supported her, but when life was dark it deserted her. In the summer of 1992, the forthcoming publication of a biography by Andrew Morton, a journalist from the lower echelons of the trade, caught the attention of Andrew Neil, the Editor of The Sunday Times. Several weeks of serialisation damaging to the monarchy followed. Despite complaints from the Press Council and pleas from the Archbishop of Canterbury, the campaign raged on. It could be seen as a major destructive force in the Princess's life.

Diana, Princess of Wales, was born at Park House, Sandringham, as the Hon Diana Frances Spencer. She was the third and youngest daughter of Viscount Althorp (later the 8th Earl Spencer, who died in 1992), and his first wife, the Hon Frances Roche (later married for some years to the wallpaper heir, Peter Shand-Kydd). She became Lady Diana Spencer on the death of her grandfather in 1975.

Her Spencer forebears had been sheep farmers in Warwickshire, who settled at Althorp, Northamptonshire, in 1506. Cousins of the Spencer-Churchills, they included many connoisseurs and patrons of the arts. Having inherited a considerable fortune from Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough, they were able to spend large sums on antiques, paintings and sculpture.

For many generations they served their Sovereigns, and the tradition continued. The Princess's father was equerry to King George VI and to the present Queen. Both her grandmothers, the Countess Spencer and Ruth Lady Fermoy, were close members of the court of Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother, as were no fewer than four Spencer great-aunts. To her two sons, the Princess of Wales passed strong physical Spencer traits, considerably diluting the Hanoverian strain in the Royal Family.

While the Princess's paternal ancestors were representative of the Whig oligarchy of the 18th century, she also descended through several lines from the Stuart Kings Charles II and James II, who were not ancestors of the Prince of Wales. Other paternal forebears included the great Duke of Marlborough, Sir Robert Walpole, the Marquess of Anglesey (who lost a leg at Waterloo), and the Earl of Lucan, of Balacava fame. On her mother's side there was Irish and Scottish blood, with a sprinkling of pioneer New England stock. Her closest relationship to the Prince of Wales was that of seventh cousin once removed, through their common descent from the 3rd Duke of Devonshire.

The Princess was educated at Riddlesworth Hall in Norfolk, and then at West Heath, a boarding school in Kent. She achieved no O-level passes. Later she attended a finishing school, the Institut Alpin Videmanette at Rougemont in Switzerland, for six weeks. Her childhood was somewhat unsettled and unhappy because of the separation of her parents when she was six, and their divorce in 1969. She had more natural affinity with her father than with her mother.

During the period after leaving school, the Princess worked as a nanny, a babysitter and a skivvy. She attended a cookery course in September 1978, and soon after this her father collapsed with a grave cerebral haemorrhage, from which it took him months to recover. In 1979 she worked briefly as a student teacher at Miss Vachon's dance studios. Later she was invited by friends to help at the Young England Kindergarten in Pinlco, where she was popular with the children. She worked at the kindergarten three days a week and at other times she looked after a small American boy.

In London the Princess shared a flat at Coleherne Court, Earls Court, with three girlfriends. They found her a kind and thoughtful flatmate, keen on housework and evenings in front of the television, a lover of ballet, opera and cinema. She loved to dance and sometimes they returned to find her dancing happily around the flat. At the time of the pre-wedding press siege, these girls were to prove staunchly loyal allies. Fortunately, they were content to spend hours in each other's company. Years later, one of them, Mrs William Bartholomew, the former Carolyn Fride, was a source for the Morton biography of the Princess.

The Prince and Princess of Wales claimed to have met in a ploughed field at Althorp where Prince Charles was staying as a guest of Lady Sarah Spencer, the Princess's elder sister, in November 1977. The accepted version of the story is that Prince Charles and Lady Sarah were romantically involved, though not deeply so. The younger sister fell in love with everything about the Prince, was keen to be Princess of Wales, and saw in him a challenge.

She knew from an early age that she would have to tread carefully, and she never put a foot wrong. It was not until the late summer of 1980 that Lady Diana Spencer's name came to the attention of the world. The Prince of Wales was nearly 32 and the subject of his eventual marriage had been of consuming interest to the media for nearly a decade. Nor had he helped his difficulty by pronouncing that he thought 30 a good age at which to marry. As November 1978 loomed, the pressure increased, but he remained a bachelor, and there were times when he looked a less than happy man.

Lady Diana's appearance on the scene refocused press attention on the Prince's bachelor state. While a discreet and low-key courtship was executed in private, Lady Diana was pursued to and from work by determined cameramen and reporters and had to resort to complicated manoeuvres to rescue the last vestiges of her privacy. Her subtle handling of the press earned her not only universal respect but the real affection of these normally hard-hearted men. At one point after she had broken down in tears, a note of apology was placed under her windscreen wiper. But the press pursuit persisted to such an extent that Lady Diana's mother wrote a letter of appeal to The Times. Later the Queen was obliged to complain to newspaper editors through her press secretary. The Prince proposed early in February 1981.

The engagement was announced on February 24, after which Lady Diana was better protected. From that day on she was surrounded by what she described as "a mass of smiling faces". Indeed the engagement was greeted with universal approval — though the Princess herself found her immediate premarriage days in Buckingham Palace both tense and lonely.

The Royal Wedding took place in St Paul's Cathedral on July 29, 1981, by the shared wish of both bride and groom. Prince Charles ensured that it was a "marvellous, musical, emotional experience", with three orchestras playing and Kiri te Kanawa (soon afterwards appointed a Dame) and the Bach Choir singing. Lady Diana chose her favourite school hymn, I vow to thee my Country.

Many heads of state attended, including nearly all the crowned heads of Europe, President Mitterrand of France, and Mrs Nancy Reagan, wife of the then President of the United States. The King of Tonga required a special chair to be built to support his mighty frame. A last-minute absentee was King Juan Carlos of Spain, because of the decision of the Prince and Princess to embark on the Royal Yacht Britannia at Gibraltar. The wedding day was such that for a brief while it seemed that all strife was set aside, the sun blazed richly and at the end of it the police thanked the public for their vigilance, and the public praised the police, and, as one commentator put it, "the world was a friendlier and easier place for everyone".

The honeymoon was spent first at Broadlands, the home of Lord and Lady Rosebery, and a favoured retreat of the Prince when he had stayed there with the late Lord Mountbatten in his youth. Then they cruised on Britannia in the Mediterranean. A long holiday at Balmoral followed.

Returning to London in October, the Prince and Princess took up residence at Kensington Palace and at Highgrove House in Gloucestershire. These were their homes for the next 11 years. Their first royal engagement was a 300-mile tour of Wales, the first such visit of a Princess of Wales for 113 years. The tour included a visit to Caernarfon Castle where the Prince had been invested in 1969. The Princess of Wales was given the Freedom of Cardiff, made her first public speech and spoke a few words of Welsh. Despite the ever-present threat of incendiary devices, the tour was a resounding success.

The Princess made an immediate impact on the world of fashion. The British fashion industry, long in a precarious state, was given a welcome boost by her arrival. Her style was fresh, attractive and original. She became the personification of current trends in British fashion, with felicitous results for the trade.

The Princess soon revealed a penchant for outfits of considerable glamour. On her first outing with her fiancé, she had arrived at Goldsmiths' Hall in a décolleté black tulle dress, a considerable contrast to her formerly discreet image, which caused the octogenarian Lady Diana Cooper to joke: "Wasn't that a mighty feat to set to, a King?" Her wedding dress with its lavish detail and lengthy train matched the magnificence of St Paul's Cathedral and her going away outfit was chic and stylish. The fair fringe she favoured early in the marriage was widely copied for a time.

Very soon the Princess was pregnant, giving birth to a boy, Prince William of Wales, on June 21, 1982. A second son, Prince Harry, followed in September 1984. In the early years of the marriage the Princess normally undertook joint engagements. This was the period of the Princess's apprenticeship. But it soon became clear that of the two it was her that the public most wished to see, and Prince Charles was to some extent reduced to a male dancer supporting his glorious ballerina in her pirouettes.

While the popularity of his bride should have delighted him, it added a sense of pointlessness to his slightly frustrated life. Equally, he was irritated when he tried to make an important speech, and the next day the papers merely reported his wife's outfit. He failed to grasp that one of the things the world wanted was a recurring series of images of a young couple enjoying a happy family life. He always appeared reluctant in such photo-calls, fearing that this diminished the import of his more serious endeavours. The Princess, on the other hand, fulfilled all such demands to perfection.

The respective backgrounds of the Prince and Princess of Wales were an additional challenge in the creation of a happy family atmosphere. She had come from a broken home, while his upbringing had been formal to say the least. His early companion had been his nanny, and he lacked any close involvement with his parents.

The love of solitude to which the Prince adhered even after marriage, combined with his love of polo and hunting, inevitably left the Princess on many occasions without him. But both parents shared an adoration for their children.

Even as the world rejoiced on their wedding day, the Princess was aware that she had not entirely captured Prince Charles's heart. Yet she always felt that she would win him. He most probably felt that the marriage was akin to an arranged one, and some have said that he did not enter into it in the same spirit as his bride. When the Princess realised that Prince Charles was never entirely to reciprocate the love she felt for him, she, like many mothers, transferred much of her devotion to her sons.

The Princess celebrated her 21st birthday in July 1982, and that September she represented the Queen at the funeral of Princess Grace of Monaco in the cathedral at Monte Carlo.

The Princess was soon busily involved in the world of public duty. As the years went by, she evolved into a deeply committed member of the Royal Family. She swiftly became better informed — in the early days of her marriage a Fleet Street editor was surprised to hear Prince Charles explaining to her at lunch that Chancellor Kohl was the leader of West Germany. She also learnt the tricks of the royal trade, speaking easily to individual members of the public of all ages and possessing a good instinct as to what to talk about.

Yet in the early days she seldom made speeches in public, and when she did they were of the most formal sort. As she gained confidence, she began to write her own speeches, delivering them from the podium with calm assurance. She spoke of the importance of the family in everyday life, the rehabilitation of drug-users, and urged more compassion for those dying of Aids. When she and the Prince of Wales appeared together in television interviews it was not long before she was the more articulate of the two, leaving him almost monosyllabic, despite an earlier reputation for fluency.

The modern manner is for members of the Royal Family to be actively involved with any organisation of which they are patron or president. Until she gave up most of her charitable commitments at the end of 1993, the Princess was never merely a figurehead, but served directly as fundraiser, promoter, chairman of meetings — and, of course, as public spokeswoman.

She gave her support to an enormous number of charities, in a wide range of fields. Among her key presidencies or patronages were Barnardo's, the Great Ormond Street Hospital for Children, RADA, the Royal Academy of Music, the Leprosy Mission, the National Aids Trust, the Royal Marsden Hospital, Help the Aged, and the National Meningitis Trust.

An exhausting round of overseas travel was also a feature of her marriage. Her first big overseas tour occurred in March and April 1983, when she accompanied Prince Charles on a visit to Australia. The infant Prince William went with them. They travelled extensively from the Northern Territory to Canberra, through New South Wales, Tasmania, Southern Australia, Western Australia, Queensland and Victoria. At that time the Australian Prime Minister, Bob Hawke, was a committed republican, but he was forced to concede that the Princess was "a lovely lady".

The Australian trip (followed on that occasion by 12 days in New Zealand) was the first of three such visits. In June they went to Canada where there was an outbreak of "Di-mania", a 1980s equivalent of Beatlemania.

In February 1984, the Princess made her first major solo visit abroad, to Norway to attend a gala performance of Carmen by the London City Ballet. Arriving in the snow, she was at once dubbed "The Snow Princess".

In the spring of 1985 she and the Prince of Wales went to Italy, a 17-day tour which included a visit to Sir Harold Acton at La Pietra, and to the Pope in Rome. Venice was perhaps the highlight of the tour, and here they were joined by Prince William and Prince Harry.

In October the Princess spent two days with the 1st Battalion The Royal Hampshire Regiment (of which she was a Colonel-in-Chief until she relinquished her military commitments when her divorce in 1996) in West Germany. Following their second Australian visit, they paused briefly in Fiji, and rested in Hawaii before visiting the Reagan's in the United States. The White House dinner and dance was typical of the mid-Eighties bonanza-style entertainment favoured during the Reagan era, and the highlight of the evening was when the Princess accompanied John Travolta in a sensational dance to You're the One that I Want from the film Grease, an experience which both enjoyed and which served to resurrect Travolta's flagging career.

Other destinations during these years included Austria, Japan (where there was more "Di-mania"), the Gulf states, Portugal and France.

In 1989 the Princess returned to the United States, this time for a less glitzy trip to New York, where she visited centres for the homeless and dying children in the Aids ward of Harlem Hospital. She was dubbed, in American parlance, "Bigger than Gorbys, Better than Bush". There was a visit to Kuwait (where security was intense following the Salman Rushdie affair), and the United Arab Emirates. In June she and the Prince revisited Australia, and in November they went on a Far East tour, taking in Indonesia and Hong Kong.

Visiting Nigeria in 1990, the Princess saw much suffering at first hand, and pointedly shook hands with the chief of a leper colony. In May the same year she and the Prince paid the first royal visit to a Warsaw Pact country, when they travelled to Hungary. In October the Princess went alone to Washington for a ballet gala and to further understanding of Aids.

In November she and the Prince went to Japan for the enthronement of Emperor Akihito (a visit surrounded by controversy in Britain). There were also visits to Brussels, to British troops in Germany, to Prague, and to Expo 92 in Seville.

Besides the birth of her two children, there were other events of significance in her years of marriage. She much encouraged the union between Prince Andrew and her friend Sarah Ferguson, and she was delighted when they married in 1986. For some years they remained close friends and confidantes, and it was a cause of distress to her when that marriage came apart in the spring of 1992.

The Duchess of York had appeared to be a good ally at court, never as glamorous as the Princess, but certainly her friend. But the arrival of the Duchess of York was, in retrospect, a damaging thing for the Princess of Wales, for she began to be tarnished by the new Duchess's fun-loving and sometimes irresponsible attitude.

The two may have seemed alike in character, but they were essentially different, the Princess being a great deal more dutiful and less interested in the perks. But the Duchess of York influenced her somewhat and it was during the time when they were close that the two then Royal Highnesses prodded their friends with the tip of their ferrule at the Royal Ascot meeting, one of a number of incidents that caused Establishment eyebrows to be raised.

Each girl represented an alternative fantasy for the young: to be like the Princess of Wales was to diet rigorously and undertake regular aerobics. The Duchess of York, on the other hand, made few concessions and her attitude was more one of "Take me as I am". In 1988 they were both in Klosters when their friend Major Hugh Lindsay was killed in an accident skiing off-piste with the Prince of Wales. This tragedy long dampened the spirits of all three.

For many years a small circle was aware of the not altogether happy state of the Princess of Wales's marriage. Much was written about this over the years, but the situation continued until The Sunday Times adopted the story in 1992 and blew it up to sensational proportions. The public was left with another dream shattered, and the monarchy's image was tarnished.

The 1992 revelations suggested that the Prince and Princess of Wales had failed to establish a mutually happy rapport during their marriage. There were many obstacles to natural happiness. With nearly 13 years between them, they were almost of different generations, he being born in the late 1940s, she in the early 1960s. The Prince was always of a serious disposition, inflexible in his way of life, not noted for his willingness to accept change. The Princess was initially more light-headed, though she developed considerably in the first decade of the marriage. She certainly entered the union with a more generous heart than her husband, who did not disguise his anxiety that the taking of a wife was an additional burden in an already busy life.

Despite her enormous popularity with the public, the differences in their interests seemed to divide them increasingly as the years progressed. Though they were both energetically and successfully involved in public life, the framework of their home life gradually eroded. He began to entertain separately. She spent more time in London, frequently away from Highgrove. Their problems were the focus of more attention than any couple could bear. Not only did they have to face their respective difficulties, but they had to do so in the full blast of media attention.

The strain began to show. The Prince of Wales had resumed his earlier association with a former girlfriend, Mrs Camilla Parker-Bowles. The Princess's name was linked with those of two men nearer to her age, the Old Etonian James Gilbey and the Life Guards officer James Hewitt. There were clear signs of marital discord during a visit to India in February 1992, when the Princess spent time alone looking miserable at the Taj Mahal, and during a four-day trip to Korea in November that year, when the Prince and Princess, clearly unhappy in each other's company, were dubbed "The Glums" by reporters.

By the end of 1992, speculation about the state of the royal marriage had come to a head, fuelled by the release of a tape of an intimate conversation between the Princess and James Gilbey. There was talk of separate living arrangements, and a suggestion that reconciliation was now impossible. In December, John Major confirmed to the House of Commons that the couple were to separate.

Separation did little to reduce public interest, particularly after the discovery in 1993 of another intimate tape recording, this time of a conversation between the Prince and Mrs Parker-Bowles. In December 1993 the Princess tearfully bowed out of public life, severing her links with most of the charities she had supported and begging to be left alone by the press. In 1994 Prince Charles admitted his long-standing and continuing relationship with Mrs Parker-Bowles in a television interview with Jonathan Dimbleby.

Despite her pleas for privacy, the Princess remained very much in the public eye. As she set about putting her life in order during the period of personal confusion that followed the separation — visiting gymnasiums one day and psychotherapists the next — her every step was dogged by photographers and reporters. Yet her relationship with the media was always more complicated than she was prepared to admit. She may have been unhappy about some of the press ambushes, and about speculation on her association with married men such as the art dealer Oliver Hoare and the England rugby captain Will Carling, but there were undoubtedly occasions when she courted the attention, in an attempt to influence perceptions of her marriage and its breakdown.

Nowhere was this more evident than in her extraordinary decision — taken without consulting the Royal Household or even her own advisers — to appear on a special edition of the BBC Panorama programme in November 1995. She spoke frankly about her unhappy relationship with the Royal Family, her eating disorders, and her own and her husband's adultery. She announced her desire to be seen as "a queen of people's hearts". On August 28, 1996, the Prince and Princess of Wales divorced.

Throughout her marital difficulties, the Princess had remained devoted to her sons. After the divorce, when she and the Prince were given joint custody, she continued to invest considerable energy in their upbringing. She was an adoring mother, and there were many images of mother and children together, the most celebrated when the children ran to their mother's arms on Britannia after a period apart. The devotion was reciprocated, and her boys were a great source of comfort to her.

After her divorce the Princess made a return to public life, associating herself particularly with the work of the Red Cross, and taking a leading — and sometimes controversial — role in the international campaign to ban landmines. Earlier this year she auctioned many of her dresses to raise money for charity. She also seemed to find new happiness in her private life, spending much of the past few weeks in the company of Dodi Fayed, who died with her.

When she married the Prince of Wales, Diana said on television that she saw her life as a great challenge. Realistic though she was at 20 years of age, she underestimated how great that challenge would prove and at what cost to personal happiness it would be met.

The Princess made a lasting impression on the public. On the whole, they loved her, and even when she tried their patience, she remained a source of fascination. Outwardly shy, she had no lack of inner strength and common sense. Before her marriage she cast her head down, hiding behind her fringe. After the marriage she gained confidence, the head came up, and she began to acquire that star quality that drew all eyes in crowds and preoccupied fellow lunchers in restaurants. That quality, and that strength of character, saw her through her marital difficulties, and remained with her once the marriage was over.

Soon after her marriage to the Prince of Wales she was given the Royal Family Order by the Queen, but she was never given any other honours, such as the Grand Cross of the Royal Victorian Order, which she perhaps merited. On her divorce she assumed the title Diana, Princess of Wales, and remained a member of the Royal Family. She received various foreign orders on state visits. Her two sons survive her.

DAY ONE:
Why we don't like to talk about money
PAGE 34

BRITAIN'S BEST LOVED CHILDREN'S BOOK
The BBC/Waterstone's choice
PAGE 31

RUNNERS AND RYDERS FOR EUROPE
PAGES 54, 56

THE TIMES
ITF
Enter your fantasy team
PAGE 39

Up to 100,000 will lose state support

Labour scraps student grant a year early

By DAVID CHARTER, EDUCATION CORRESPONDENT

THE GOVERNMENT has decided to scrap the student grant one year earlier than expected in a move which will remove state support from up to 100,000 students.

David Blunkett, the Education Secretary, has rejected plans to phase out the annual £1,700 maintenance grant — which covers living costs — over three years. The Times has learnt that ministers will instead cut the grant in half next year and abolish it in 1999 in an attempt to tackle the growing crisis in higher education funding.

The decision to speed up the process, to be announced later in the autumn, is likely to trigger another scramble for university places next year. Under the latest proposal, all students who start receiving a grant will be able to continue at the same level for the duration of their course, increasing the incentive to secure the last grant next year.

Ministers, who are threatened with a backbench revolt over their decision to impose tuition fees of £1,000 on students from September 1998, are anxious to implement electorally difficult decisions early in their term of office.

Official sources had said the grant would be phased out over three years after Mr Blunkett announced in July that it would eventually be replaced by a loan.

Today's disclosure will increase the pressure on ministers to make plain whether they will introduce bursaries to help students on longer courses, particularly those studying medicine, who will lose up to £10,000.

Mandatory grants to help with living costs were intro-

Blunkett: rejected three year phasing out of grant

duced in 1962, when a government inquiry, the Anderson Committee, concluded that grants would "ensure that those qualified to take advantage of costly facilities are not deterred from doing so".

Sir Ron Dearing, whose National Committee of Inquiry into Higher Education reported in July, called the scrapping of maintenance grants "regressive", predicting that it could put off students from poorer backgrounds.

Student loans were introduced in 1990, when the level of grants was frozen for four years at £2,845, before falling for the next three years while the amount of loans rose.

There are 916,000 undergraduates receiving grants totalling around £1.5 billion. About one third receive the full annual amount of £1,700, or £2,100 for those in London, because their parents' net income is less than £16,000. The level of grant diminishes on a sliding scale until parental income tops £30,000. The Universities and Colleges Admissions Service yesterday reported an unprecedented 45 per cent increase in late applications directly into this year's clearing process, which matches students with unfilled courses after the publication of A-level results.

The Government has yet to clarify how much universities will benefit from these extra costs for students. Vice-chancellors, who predict a shortfall of £3 billion by 2000, are fighting to retain as much as possible.

Although ministers have promised that universities can keep the tuition fees, the amount the Government will continue to pay them for courses is under review. Kim Howells, an Education Minister, last week told vice-chancellors that no decisions had been made on university funding for 1998-99.

But an Education Department spokesman, admitting the decision to scrap grants earlier than expected, said: "Next year is a transition year when about half the grants will be replaced with the loan. The following year the loan will be extended further as the grant moves to nothing. We have said it would be phased out in two to three years."

Vice-chancellors have become increasingly uneasy about plans to centralise university funding and fear the Treasury may be the main beneficiary. Not only will the payment of tuition costs be removed from local education authorities and handed to the funding council quangos, but there are signs that fee collection may be handled by the new student support agency recommended by Sir Ron.

Aboriginal tribal elders carrying the skull of a great warrior leader after a solemn ceremony at Liverpool Town Hall yesterday. The presentation of the skull, in a simple wooden box sheathed in kangaroo skin, was described as one of the "great moments in Aboriginal history" by Mingli Wanjerri-Nungala, right. Ken Colbung, centre, who led the campaign for the return of the remains of the 19th-century warrior Yagan, said: "We are grateful that we can go home with the spiritual embodiment of Yagan, our great hero." The skull was brought to Britain as a trophy in 1833 and buried in a Liverpool cemetery. Richard Wilkes, left, said that Yagan's spirit would be freed when it was reburied beside the rest of the body. Councillor Eileen Devaney, who presented the skull to the elders, said she hoped it made amends for some of the pain caused to indigenous peoples all over the world. "It reflects a part of British imperialism and imperialismists which these days we feel ashamed of that dark part in our history." The exhumation was undertaken with funding from the Australian Government.

Tribal hero's skull starts journey home

Existing TV technology could be switched off in ten years

By RAYMOND SNODDY, MEDIA EDITOR

THE Government is examining plans to encourage the development of digital television in the UK by switching off existing analogue broadcasts within a decade.

Any decision to set a ten-year deadline for moving channels such as BBC1, BBC2 and ITV to digital would be politically controversial. It would mean that everyone in the UK would have to get a new television set or a digital "black box" if they wanted to continue to watch television. The black box is expected to cost between £200 and £300 when it comes on the market.

The move is among a range of options being considered by Chris Smith, the Culture, Media and Sport Secretary, who has declared himself an enthusiast for the new technology and is eager to promote its use.

British Digital Broadcasting and the UK's main broadcasters plan to launch up to 40 channels of digital terrestrial television in autumn next year. For the foreseeable future the main television channels will be broadcast simultaneously in analogue and digital, but there would be enormous commercial advantages in eventually moving all television channels to digital, as is already planned in America.

It would allow the existing analogue frequencies to be sold in a multibillion-pound auction for use for mobile communications.

Michael Green, chairman of British Digital Broadcasting, the main commercial digital terrestrial television operator, and chairman of Carlton Communications, said in an interview with The Times: "The Government is going to turn off the unlogged signal. It is going to announce at some point when it is going to turn off the unlogged signal. Chris Smith has asked how he can help us on digital terrestrial."

Mr Smith said at the weekend that he was indeed an enthusiast for digital terrestrial television (DTT), which would allow viewers to get many new channels without the need for satellite dishes or cable connections. "We are looking at a range of different options. We are anxious to assist the development of DTT," he said.

It is believed that NERA, a firm of communications consultants, has been called in to assist with the decision. As well as setting a target date for the ending of analogue transmissions, another option that is being looked at would involve auctioning the frequencies well in advance to provide money to subsidise the cost of the digital black box receivers for the public.

The previous Government decided against setting a final date for the end of analogue broadcasts. Instead it decided to review the situation in five years or when 50 per cent of the country had digital-receiving equipment, whichever came first.

Michael Green, page 37

Self-financing legal aid proposed by barristers

By FRANCES GIBB, LEGAL CORRESPONDENT

PLANS for self-financing legal aid in which winning litigants pay part of their damages into a central pot that funds the legal costs of losers are being considered by the Government.

The plans for a "contingency legal aid fund" could open access to justice to thousands of middle-income people who cannot afford lawyers' fees and who fall outside eligibility for legal aid.

Along with the wider use of "no win, no fee" work, under which lawyers charge fees if they win, the new fund could form a main plank of an overhaul of the £1.6 billion legal aid scheme expected later this year.

The idea, from the Bar, has been put to the Lord Chancellor's Department and to Sir Peter Middleton, chairman of BZW and former Treasury mandarin, who was asked by the Lord Chancellor, Lord Irvine of Lairg, to review ways to curb the legal aid bill and better target its funds. The Bar is expected to publish details shortly.

The Law Society, the professional body of solicitors, is in favour of the scheme in principle but says it is crucial to choose the right model.

Geoff Hoon, the minister at the Lord Chancellor's Department responsible for legal aid reforms, said: "Certainly any suggestion — particularly one which is presented as self-financing — is obviously going to be very appealing."

The test would be how much initial "start-up" funding was required and how the idea fitted any proposals that Sir Peter might make. However, Mr Hoon added: "There is no doubt that we would look favourably at any such scheme the Bar comes up with."

As a more effective way of delivering legal aid, Mr Hoon favours extending the "no win" scheme to all civil disputes where money is involved. At present the scheme is confined to personal injury work, insolvency cases and human rights cases.

But a report due out shortly from the Lord Chancellor's own watchdog on the legal profession, the Advisory Committee on Education and Conduct, is expected to endorse the workings of the scheme over the past two years.

Short said she had been made a "whipping girl"

Furious Short hints that she may bow out

By JAMES LANDALE, POLITICAL REPORTER

CLARE SHORT, the International Development Secretary, launched a fresh attack on political spin-doctors and hinted that their "bile and dishonesty" could force her to resign.

She was infuriated by claims last week that she had been sidelined by a new Whitehall action group which was taking charge of the crisis in Montserrat.

Ms Short angered Montserratians when she suggested that the island's politicians would end up demanding "golden elephants" in compensation for the plight caused by continued volcanic eruptions, a remark she later conceded had been unfortunate.

In an interview with a newspaper at the weekend, she blamed the Foreign Office and Downing Street press departments for reports in the media that the Foreign Office was taking over co-ordination of policy on the Montserrat crisis.

Ms Short has clashed with spin-doctors in the past, notably last summer when she criticised the "dark forces" surrounding Tony Blair — widely seen as a reference to Peter Mandelson, the Minister without Portfolio.

She told The Independent on Sunday: "I've been here a few times and this is the pattern. It is not to do with the truth. It is to do with finding a scapegoat, but I am shocked that complete misinformation can go so far."

She dropped a hint that she may be forced out of office by such spin-doctors. "There comes a time in politics when you think, 'Gosh, if I have to live with this much bile and dishonesty, there's a limit to my capacity to take it.'"

Attacking Foreign Office staff for media reports that she had been "sidelined" over Montserrat, she said there had been "briefing out of the reactionary end of the Foreign Office and they clearly don't know anything about me".

She said she was the "whipping girl" for people who cannot bear the idea of an independent department with an aid budget which is committed to development and not to Britain's short-term interest. They are out to destroy the department. "There were, she said, 'voices that look backward at Britain's role in the world and rather yearn for Empire'."

'CHANGE WILL DO YOU GOOD'

SAYS NWS BANK.

NWS BANK has changed its name to CAPITAL BANK, and with the change comes an even sharper focus on your business and your business needs. The result is fast, flexible, responsive finance, which is only a telephone call away from doing your business the world of good.

For more information, call Mike Perry on 01244 693463 or visit our web site: <http://www.capitalbank.co.uk>

CAPITAL BANK
A BANK OF SCOTLAND GROUP COMPANY

Wicked Roald Dahl is children's choice

The grown-ups' preferences for best children's books, products of a gentler age

The politically incorrect author has taken seven of the top ten titles for under-16s, reports Tim Jones

BRITAIN'S favourite children's book is Roald Dahl's Matilda, a poll has found. The choice was described as delivering "a poke in the eye for political correctness".

More than 10,000 people who voted in a poll organised by BBC's Bookworm programme and Waterstones, the booksellers, decided that when it comes to entertaining and understanding children, Dahl was the master.

There were three lists: the top 20 books enjoyed by under-16s; the adult choice of best children's books; and the overall positions. All readers, irrespective of age, decided that Matilda, the story of a book-loving child who exacts revenge on her parents when they force her to watch television instead, was a classic.

Honor Wilson-Fletcher, publicity manager for Waterstones, said: "This is a poke in the eye for political correctness. It shows that children can enjoy tales that have a rather dark side to them. Children expect awful things to happen and can read about them without growing up to be in any way strange."

She said that the inclusion of Jacqueline Wilson's book Double Act, about the problems of being a twin, which came tenth in the under-16s list, showed that young children were concerned with contemporary issues and not just with such escapism as bunnies bolting down rabbit holes.

The over-16s, reflecting perhaps a gentler age, decided that Kenneth Grahame's Wind in the Willows was the seminal children's book, with C.S. Lewis's The Lion, the Witch and the Wardrobe second and A.A. Milne's Winnie the Pooh third. For them, Dahl came eighth with Charlie and the Chocolate Factory.

But when left alone, children show the gap between them and adults in their reading habits and have elevated Dahl as their literary cult hero. In the under-16 list, he takes seven of the top ten books.

He commands the top three places, before J.R.R. Tolkien's The Hobbit at No 4 and Winnie the Pooh at No 5. He then commands places six to nine, with the No 10 slot held by Jacqueline Wilson.

Ms Wilson-Fletcher said that it was noticeable that Disney titles did not feature in the top 20 and showed that children recognised film titles as the product of promotional activity.

Books that failed to reach the overall top 100 include The Jolly Postman, The Jungle Book and Dr Seuss's The Cat in the Hat. Paddington Bear fails to make the list and there is no sign of Spike Milligan, Raymond Briggs or Beatrix Potter.

Griff Rhys Jones, who was to have announced the results yesterday on the programme, which was cancelled because of the death of Diana, Princess of Wales, said: "I predict that Roald Dahl will take over the world eventually." Daisy Goodwin, editor of Bookworm, said: "I think it is great that Roald Dahl, whose books have been banned in some American states because of political correctness, have got a vote of confidence from British children. It just shows that the more politically incorrect and cruel a book is, the more children like it. The way to get children reading is not to lecture them but to entertain them."

Griff Rhys Jones with the favourite of under-16s: "Dahl will take over the world"

Enid Blyton, who has been attacked by contemporary critics as being out of touch and even racist, creeps into the top 100 at No 26 with The Faraway Tree. Her next entry is at No 33, with The Famous Five. Robert Louis Stevenson's classic Treasure Island makes it to No 40, one place ahead of Beatrix Potter with Peter Rabbit. Rudyard Kipling, once regarded as an essential author for young children, could manage only 101st place with The Just So Stories.

Imagination has last word over realism

Sarah Johnson, children's books reviewer for The Times, finds a moral in the poll for publishers who prefer angst to magic ROALD DAHL'S astounding success, taking seven of the top ten places in the choice of under-16s, stems from his touch for the anarchic and magical expressed in cool, unfussy prose.

His books delight children who want to see the laws of the physical universe turned topsy-turvy, yet not those of the moral universe — so that baddies (and nasty children, too) get their desserts in the most outrageous and surreal ways.

Matilda was published in 1988, two years before Dahl's death at the age of 74. Vindictive and mischievous though she may be, there could hardly be a better heroine for today's children. She is super-intelligent and, above all, a voracious reader of challenging literature. She is driven to acts of mischief by her frustration at being saddled with semi-literate, conch-potato parents.

Sent away to school, Matilda discovers that her favourite teacher, the sweet and kind Miss Honey, is the victim of the scheming and evil headmistress, Miss Trunchbull. Matilda uses her newly-discovered telekinetic powers to expose Miss Trunchbull as a criminal and fraud.

Dahl has sometimes been criticised for the violence and vindictiveness of his most popular children's stories. It is always worth remembering that it was Dahl's hatred of adults who use their superior strength to control and frighten children that motivated him. His own childhood predated talk of children's rights and child-centred learning.

The question in the minds of children's book publishers, on looking down the lists of favourites, has to be: have we been getting it all wrong? Recent publishing trends have promoted gritty realism and horror.

We are assured that children nowadays want books that confront "real" issues such as drugs, race, divorce — preferably involving the Internet and underage sex as well. Fantasy and magic are old hat. The child-parent relationship often takes over the story.

But realism and parent-angst are represented in the top 100, mainly by Jacqueline Wilson, a brilliant young writer of wit and subtlety whose stories are never patronising and often complex and many-layered. (Double Act is written as two parallel texts, representing the voices of identical twins.)

The lists show that children who really enjoy reading — those most likely to have taken part in the survey — respond as readily as they ever did to good writing, imaginative flair and integrity. The elegant prose of the New Yorker essayist E.B. White makes Charlotte's Web resonate more than anything by Enid Blyton, author of the world's most boring dialogues, who bludgeoned her way into the top 100 only, I suspect, by sheer force of having written more than 700 titles, all as comforting as Instant Whip.

Above all, the desire to be whisked into a magical universe, where children — or their substitutes, such as animals and "different" people like Hobbits — have to take the moral consequences of their actions, is constant.

Couple claim £3,000 damages for bungled wedding photos

By ADRIAN LEE

A COUPLE who re-enacted their Caribbean wedding after photographs of the original ceremony were bungled are claiming £3,000 damages from the travel company that promised them a "dream wedding".

The bride, Tracy Lloyd, burst into tears when she was presented with the original record of her big day in Antigua. Most of the photographs were blurred and in some her face was obscured.

She and her husband, Gary, 27, from Salford, Greater Manchester, are claiming compensation from Unijet, the company that booked their wedding ceremony and honeymoon, and the owners of the resort where they stayed.

Two days after their wedding, on December 17 last year, the Lloyds had to go through the ceremony again, with a different photographer. The results were perfect, but they claim that the distress ruined their honeymoon. They have already rejected a refund of £333. Mr and Mrs Lloyd paid £3,600 for their holiday and £75 for the wedding photography.

Mrs Lloyd, 27, a laboratory technician, said: "I was distraught. I couldn't believe that it had happened to us after we had saved up for so long. It was supposed to be the perfect wedding but the photographs were more like holiday snaps

After the original wedding pictures, left, were blurred, the Lloyds re-enacted the ceremony two days later with a different photographer, and much improved results that had been taken by an amateur."

Her husband, an accounts clerk, said: "The second set of pictures is excellent but we know they are false. Our first kiss, as man and wife, the cutting of the cake, the excitement on our faces — all those moments had passed. They are something that you cannot recapture."

"It was all very embarrassing. We had a wedding video shot during the first ceremony and, because our original witnesses flew home before the second ceremony, the photographs show completely different people."

In its brochure, Unijet boasts that a Caribbean "dream wedding" is the "perfect alternative" to tying the knot at home. "Sit back, relax and put the most special day of your life in the hands of expert professionals." It urges couples to ensure a photographer is booked but warns that equipment can be more basic than at home.

Unijet and Travel and Resorts International deny they were negligent. The wedding photographs were an optional extra, they said, and not part of the package. Sharon Nash, Unijet's Quality Control Executive, apologised to Mr Lloyd in a letter, but added: "We would strongly emphasise that this service was arranged and paid for locally and does not form part of the contract between yourself and Unijet."

A spokeswoman said: "Because of the court case it would not be appropriate to say any more." Club Antigua said it ordered more flowers, rebooked a hairdresser and a horse and carriage at no cost to the Lloyds.

Acting on impulse may be genetic

By IAN MURRAY
MEDICAL CORRESPONDENT

INHERITED genes could be responsible for people marrying the wrong person, according to psychiatrists. This is because those who are born with impulsive genes are prone to take wrong decisions.

The report, published today in the British Journal of Psychiatry, suggests that a broken home can be as much the result of nature as of nurture. "An individual who, partly because of his genetic make-up, is impulsive, might make unsuitable choices of job or partner," Michael Owen of the University of Wales College of Medicine writes. "Similarly those who are more sensation-seeking — a moderately heritable trait — may be more prone to accidents."

The article says that advances are being made in understanding the way genes combine with specific environmental factors such as a stressful lifestyle and social deprivation. "One of the most important contributions of quantitative genetics has been the demonstration that nature and nurture are not nearly so separate as was once assumed," the article says.

The tendency of individuals with depression to report stressful events is to some extent influenced by familial and perhaps genetic factors. "Those who are prone to depression are more likely to perceive events as threatening," Dr Owen says that by 2010 we can be reasonably confident that at least some of the genes contributing to common psychiatric disorders will be identified. "This should pave the way for the development of new therapies that are better targeted at disease processes... and open the door to targeted intervention strategies aimed at preventing the development or progression of disease."

The study, based on work by Sir Michael Rutter of the Child Psychiatry Unit at the Institute of Psychiatry in London, says hereditary factors are seldom solely responsible for psychiatric disorders. Environmental factors can, however, trigger the condition in those with a genetic predisposition for it.

6.5%
gross p.a.
from £1

Juicy

Our Instant Access Savings Account interest rate has increased again. From 26th August you can earn 6.5% gross p.a.* on balances of JUST £1 or more. The interest paid on our Christmas Saver Account will also increase to 3.25% gross p.a.* and the bonus rate will remain at 3% gross p.a.* For more information on this and other fresh ideas call free anytime quoting ref. 59011.

Call free on 0500 40 50 60.

SAINSBURY'S BANK FRESH BANKING™ FROM SAINSBURY'S

*Gross p.a. - the annual rate of interest payable without the deduction of lower rate tax to eligible non tax-payers. Interest rates subject to variation. Calls are recorded and monitored. "Fresh Banking" is a trademark of Sainsbury's Bank plc. Telex House, 41 South Gyle Crescent, Edinburgh, EH11 9BB.

Disruptive boy comes of age as film director

FROM DALYA ALBERGE, ARTS CORRESPONDENT, AT THE VENICE FILM FESTIVAL

A MAN who left school without qualifications has directed a film starring Bob Hoskins which is the talk of the Venice Film Festival.

Shane Meadows, 24, seemed to have few prospects when he began making short films two years ago using equipment at a centre for unemployed people. Initially friends mocked him, assuming he was making "Jeremy Beadle-style home videos". Eventually, they wanted to play a part in them. So did Hoskins, who was impressed by the script and one of Mr Meadows' earlier short films.

Mr Meadows, whose mother works in a chip shop and whose father is a long-distance lorry driver, said yesterday: "He left a message on my machine that said, 'I've read the script, seen the film, when do we start?'". Hoskins, one of Britain's highest-paid actors, "took less than I got paid" for the five-week shoot, the director said.

Hoskins, star of movies such as The Long Good Friday and Money, said: "Working with Shane Meadows was a refreshing experience. He knows exactly what he wants, he's not indulgent, his enthusiasm is amazing, his Broadcasters are preparing to do battle with Westminster City Council over plans to charge them for filming on London's streets. The draft private Bill would prevent television crews filming without permission at locations such as College Green, opposite the Houses of Parliament, or outside the Old Bailey. They would have to pay a fee determined by local councils. News-gathering teams would be exempt if the film was to be broadcast within two days. The Association of London Government said that the Bill was aimed at feature film-makers who tended to cordon off entire roads.

ideas are terrific and he's open to anyone.

"It's remarkable the way Shane has succeeded in blending the poignancy and tragedy of the film with the humour, which is sometimes totally off-the-wall."

The film, TwentyFourSeven, was co-written by Mr Meadows, from Uttoxeter, Staffordshire, and a childhood friend.

It was commissioned by the BBC and Scala Productions, whose films have included Neil Jordan's award-winning The Crying Game, after Mr Meadows won a prize with a ten-minute short.

His teachers would be amazed at the success. Mr Meadows, who is in negotiations for his second feature film, showed little enthusiasm for anything at school but was an avid watcher of films. He was labelled a disruptive boy, like a few of his relatives who got into trouble, he said, "for driving cars illegally or getting into fights. So I was instantly classed as a bad person."

His film tells the story of Alan Darcy, a man with a mission to give some dignity to the disillusioned youth of a town. Mr Meadows describes it as "a celebration of this uncommon man, seen through the trials of his reluctant disciples".

He praised Hoskins' performance. "The delicacy with which he handles the role is something else."

"He told me that people never saw him things like this — characters with more sensibilities. Whatever people think of the film, they can't fail to be impressed by his performance."

David Thompson, head of BBC films, who was in Venice to promote the corporation's large number of films at the year's festival, described Mr Meadows as a name to watch. "He has a formidable talent, a fantastic sense of vision," Mr Thompson said.

"Audiences respond to directors with a strong vision. He takes them on a kind of journey. You wouldn't know this movie was by a first-time director. He's a significant talent."

Shane Meadows' first feature stars Bob Hoskins

A print of Karsh's portrait of Churchill heads into storage from the National Museum of Photography, Film and Television at Bradford

Moving images in scene change

Museum's exhibits go into storage to prepare for digital technology, writes Russell Jenkins

A STREAM of removal vans began ferrying the contents of the National Museum of Photography, Film and Television across Bradford last night as the most popular museum outside London closed for a 15-month £13.5 million refit.

During the next three weeks more than three million exhibits will be moved. The museum's prize jewel, the world's first photograph, has already been moved to a "safe house" under guard. The fragile, ghostly image of the Lattice Window at Lacock Abbey, created by William Henry Fox Talbot in 1835, is now so unstable that it is kept permanently under lock and key in darkness.

Little Ted, one of the family of cuddly toys that featured in BBC's Playschool for more than 3,700 appearances, has been taken under police guard to storage at Black Dyke Mill in Queensbury. Hughie Green's clapperboard, John Logie Baird's experimental television sets and the world's first video recorder will follow. The 30-strong staff believe it is the greatest museum evacuation since the Second World War, when many national collections were stored in Welsh slate mines.

A brass band played yesterday as the last visitors enjoyed the displays of early televisions, Victorian photographic equipment and cameras from the days of the Hollywood pioneers in their original setting.

Hundreds of boxes and crates containing the Bakelite, metal, glass and plastic products designed to capture the moving image are waiting, protected in bubble wrap, to be moved to their temporary home, where indexing alone presents a mammoth task for curators. The museum, which opened in 1983, has struggled to keep pace with rapid technological change. The funding secured for the redevelopment project, called Imaging Frontiers, comes from the Heritage and Arts Lottery, European Regional Development Fund and the Foundation for Sport and the Arts.

At the moment only 2 per cent of the museum's five major collections, spanning television, photographic technology and cinematography, can be viewed at any one time. The museum boasts the entire Kodak collection and the picture library of the Daily Herald.

When the museum reopens late next year, the galleries will have up to a quarter more space. A series of state-of-the-art galleries will offer glimpses into a digital future, from interactive and 3-D television to virtual-reality imaging. Once the building is cleared, contractors will move in to reshape the ground floor, making way for an imposing entrance atrium, a new building linking the museum to its Pictureville cinema, new galleries to house touring exhibitions, a studio where visitors can watch television classics, a second cinema, and a hands-on introduction to basic image-making for children.

During the refurbishment, the museum moves into temporary exile in Bradford's former merchants' quarter of Little Germany. Amanda Nevill, the museum director, said: "It is a very happy situation because, in effect, we are the victims of our own success. If we want to be a museum for the digital age, about today and tomorrow as well as the past, it is vital we find ways to grasp the future."

Elgar's descendants horrified by plan to create 'theme park'

BY SIMON DE BRUYELLE

PLANS to transform the birthplace of Sir Edward Elgar from a shrine to one of England's greatest composers into an international visitors' centre have horrified his descendants.

The tiny cottage at Lower Broadheath, near Malvern, Hereford and Worcester, where Elgar was born in 1857, is already overshadowed by the red-brick annex erected three years ago despite opposition from local residents.

Now the Elgar Foundation, which raised the money for the building but could not afford to complete it, believes than an even grander scheme will attract lottery money. However, critics claim that the proposals would dwarf the two-up two-down cottage, which is visited by 8,000 people a year, and destroy any vestiges of rural harmony at the site.

The composer of the Enigma Variations and The Dream of Gerontius would probably have found little inspiration in the visitors' centre, which has been compared to a "gross, anonymous out-of-town supermarket".

His great-nephew, Paul Grafton, claims that the family has not been consulted on the foundation's plans. He said: "If the community is content to permit the final despoliation of this precious memorial to the country's greatest composer of classical music, there is little that Elgar's family can do to help."

The local planning authority claims to be powerless to prevent this "further desecration", just as Worcester council was supposedly powerless to prevent the demolition of Sir Edward's gracious home at Marl Bank.

The Elgar Foundation's proposals include the demolition of Rose Cottage, a neighbouring property, a large extension and a covered walkway linking the visitors' centre to the "birthplace". The design of the present centre was based on a suggestion by the Prince of Wales, patron of the Elgar Foundation, that the building should reflect a typical Worcestershire farmyard.

Alwyn Davies, of the foundation, said: "The building is there and needs to be used. This is one way to get it into use, link it with the birthplace and have it as a meaningful centre with a wide appeal to students of music."

Tim Llewellyn, co-chairman of the Elgar Birthplace Appeal, said wide consultation after a first unsuccessful lottery bid had led to the new scheme. "We are now drawing up a new bid which we hope to submit in the autumn for funds towards the conservation and presentation of the Elgar collections, the completion of the present building and the proposed extension."

Peter Rose, a retired businessman, who lives next door to Rose Cottage, is horrified by the extension. He said: "The so-called visitors' centre that is there now is not going to win any design awards. It is a red-brick building which resembles an anonymous out-of-town supermarket. These plans propose to extend that already over-large building by another 50 per cent."

"This is a magical place for music lovers, with its own special atmosphere and charm. The danger is that all this will be swamped by a kind of Elgar theme park."

Elgar lived in some 25 homes but said before his death in 1934 that if anywhere was to be a memorial to him it should be his birthplace. His daughter, Carice Elgar-Blake, gathered his belongings and manuscripts after his death and installed them in the cottage at Lower Broadheath. The collection includes Elgar's desk at which he wrote the Enigma Variations.

Elgar: wanted birthplace to become his memorial

Lloyds Bank Interest Rates for Personal Customers

LLOYDS BANK BASE RATE

Effective from 1 August 1997 7.00% per annum

MORTGAGES

Lloyds Bank Mortgage Rate, Home Loan Rate and Lloyds Bank Black Home Mortgage Rate from 1 September 1997	% Per Annum
	8.45

SAVINGS ACCOUNTS

Investment Account	Annual Option		Monthly Option
	Gross %	Net %	Gross %	Net %
£100,000+	6.65	5.32	6.40	5.17
£ 50,000+	6.25	5.00	6.15	4.90
£ 25,000+	5.90	4.72	5.75	4.50
£ 10,000+	5.50	4.40	5.37	4.30
Below £10,000	0.50	0.40	0.50	0.40

30 Day Savings	Annual Option		Monthly Option
	Gross %	Net %	Gross %	Net %
£25,000+	4.50	3.60	4.41	3.53
£10,000+	4.15	3.32	4.07	3.26
£ 5,000+	3.85	3.08	3.78	3.02
Below £5,000	0.50	0.40	0.50	0.40

Instant Gold Savings	Annual Option		Quarterly Option
	Gross %	Net %	Gross %	Net %
£50,000+	5.80	4.64	5.68	4.54
£25,000+	5.55	4.44	5.44	4.35
£10,000+	5.15	4.12	5.05	4.04
£ 2,500+	4.95	3.96	4.86	3.89
£ 1+	0.50	0.40	0.50	0.40

Instant Savings Account	Annual Option		Monthly Option
	Gross %	Net %	Gross %	Net %
£25,000+	4.45	3.58	4.36	3.49
£10,000+	4.10	3.28	4.02	3.22
£ 5,000+	3.65	2.82	3.58	2.87
Below £500	0.50	0.40	0.50	0.40

Tessa 7.20% Tax-Free

Asset Management Service Investment Account	Gross %		Net %
£100,000+	6.46		5.17
£ 50,000+	6.08		4.86
£ 25,000+	5.73		4.60
£ 10,000+	5.37		4.20
Below £10,000	3.59		2.87

Interest rates may vary from time to time. The above figures are current rates. Lloyds Bank is not responsible for the accuracy of the information provided. NET - The annual interest rate after deduction of tax at the appropriate rate; this is shown for illustrative purposes only. Certain customers may be able to reclaim the tax from the Inland Revenue. TAX-FREE - The annual interest rate when interest is exempt from tax. Interest is normally paid at the net rate, unless the account falls within an exempt category or the account-holder qualifies to receive interest gross.

These rates of interest apply with effect from 1 September 1997

Lloyds Bank Plc, which is regulated by the Personal Investment Authority and FSA, represents only the Lloyds Bank Marketing Group for life assurance, pensions and unit trust business.

THE THOROUGHbred BANK.

Lloyds Bank Plc, 71 Lombard Street, London EC3P 3BS

Beaver given chance of new life in Britain

BY A STAFF REPORTER

BEAVERS may be reintroduced to Scotland after an absence of at least 400 years if the public give their blessing.

A two-year study for Scottish Natural Heritage has concluded that it would be possible to make the beaver the first native UK mammal to be reintroduced to the wild. But the public is to be consulted first to make sure that the creature is wanted.

"If Scotland wants the beaver back it will be up to the Scottish people. It would be hard to go ahead with the reintroduction without sufficient public support," a spokesman said.

He said that all interested bodies would be canvassed and the public asked to write in with their views. "It will not be a referendum, but we hope it will be as wide a consultation as possible."

If the scheme is approved, up to 30 beavers will be released at a site yet to be chosen. English Nature and the Countryside Council for Wales are also interested in reintroducing the animal.

Beavers are Europe's largest rodent, weighing nearly 45lb. They were once plentiful in Britain but are believed to have become extinct in about 1550 after being hunted for their fur, meat and a secretion of the castor glands which was valued for its medicinal properties.

Reintroductions by Victorian naturalists failed, although a colony released on the Isle of Bute in 1875 grew to 27. The animals felled 187 trees in diameter in five years, before dying out in about 1890.

Andrew Kitchener, curator of mammals and birds at the Royal Museum of Scotland, said the reintroduction could face opposition because of fears about damage to trees, rivers and fish stocks. But damage had been minimal where they had been reintroduced in Europe.

The beaver, Europe's largest rodent, weighs nearly 45lb

Alcoholics who dry out risk brain damage

BY NIGEL HAWKES, SCIENCE EDITOR

ALCOHOLICS who are "drying out" produce high levels of chemicals that can kill brain cells, a study of men in Salvation Army hostels has shown.

The chemicals, called kynurenes, peak on the fourth day of detoxification. The peak coincides with a loss of memory, suggesting that it is the production of excessive amounts of kynurenes that causes characteristic memory loss among long-term alcoholics.

Adrian Bonner, who produced the research with his colleague Colin Martin of the Addictive Behaviour Centre at Roehampton Institute, London, said: "The more often a person has dried out and then relapsed, the more likely it is that he has brain damage. We believe that a lot of this damage might be avoided if kynurenine production could be controlled by diet or by drugs during drying out."

The two researchers collaborated with the Salvation Army in the research, which involved taking blood and urine samples and conducting tests of brain function in 150 alcoholics in the Army's hostels. They measured the levels of kynurenes for several weeks and compared them with tests of brain function.

Kynurenes are related to the mood chemical serotonin, both of which are produced by the breakdown of tryptophan, an amino acid that is found in food.

Only a small proportion of the tryptophan goes to produce serotonin. The bulk is broken down in the liver to form kynurenes and a related chemical, quinolinic acid.

Dr Bonner suspects that in alcoholics, the biochemistry is altered so that more dietary tryptophan is diverted to the liver, producing excessive levels of kynurenes and low levels of serotonin. Without exception, the alcoholics they studied were clinically depressed, indicating low serotonin levels.

Kynurenes are known to be linked to seizures — often experienced by alcoholics drying out — while quinolinic acid alters the functioning of brain proteins important in memory.

The elevated levels found during drying out could kill brain cells in the hippocampus, so that repeated periods of intoxication followed by drying out would bring about brain degeneration. "The important thing is that we know the process can be controlled by diet," Dr Bonner said.

"By altering the carbohydrates and proteins in the diet, or by using drugs to target the enzymes in the liver that break down tryptophan, we might be able to reduce the brain damage. That could have enormous implications for the treatment and rehabilitation of alcoholics."

First results of the study were presented last month at a conference in Sweden. Now the researchers plan to extend the study internationally, again with the help of the Salvation Army.

Hope for new volcano isle town

[illegible]

Money – what is it really for?

Almost all of us want it, but we're far too embarrassed to talk about it. In the first of two extracts from her new book, The Real Meaning of Money, Dorothy Rowe argues that before we can appreciate the true value of money and what it can buy, we must first learn to understand ourselves

Money is a taboo subject. Ask about sex, no problem. Ask about money and you are entering forbidden territory. Talking openly about it is often seen as embarrassing, even in bad taste.

One of the questions I put to a wide range of people while researching my book was "Why are we so secretive about money?" Not one person queried my assumption that we were secretive. Everyone knew it was a matter of shame, humiliation and envy. Lord Howie of Toon made the connection between money and sin: "Don't forget that Christ drove the moneylenders out of the temple. There is the notion that money is rather sinful. Certainly it is associated with greed. People can easily become avaricious and want to accumulate money and hold on to it, not give it to people who deserve it. This seems very deep-seated in the human psyche. Obviously, greed and avarice are not desirable characteristics."

When I began talking to people about the meaning they gave to money, I asked them to rate on a scale of one to seven where they would place it in their lives. Everyone said somewhere in the middle; relationships and health were far more important. I suspected that I was not always being told the complete truth, so I stopped asking this question. The connection between the amount of money and possessions we desired and what we actually did with regard to them was not that simple.

Everyone wants to enjoy things whose value is non-negotiable – good relationships with others, or the enjoyment of the beauty and wonder of the world – but too often our view of money constrains us. There is an adage that goes "A man's soul is slightly smaller than his mortgage", and such a soul produces a certain meanness. Meanness, in turn, goes hand in hand with greed. These can be thought about in terms of hunger and entitlement.

The hunger for money and possessions, which we can call greed, stems from a feeling of emptiness that threatens the integrity of the sense of existence. Acquiring more and more money and possessions can be an attempt to fill this void. Meanness – the refusal to part with money and possessions – can stem from a reluctance to give up anything deemed an essential buttress to the sense of existence.

However, much of the demand for money and possessions comes not so much from hunger as a sense of entitlement, a belief that there is a preordained pattern to the world that ensures that certain things or rewards will be forthcoming to certain people. If you are one of those people, you expect your reward. When it is not forthcoming, you feel aggrieved, and complain about injustice. Just how this group of people is defined, and what the expected rewards are, depend on who is doing the defining. Usually those certain people are self-defined.

We live in a society in which religion, of whatever sort, teaches that we live in a just world, one in which goodness is rewarded and badness punished. If you believe this, and if you believe that you have striven to be virtuous – however you define that term – then, when the rewards to which you believe you are entitled are not forthcoming, you cannot help but feel aggrieved. No wonder that the lads on the trading floor complain about their bonuses, or that the leaders of industry – all, in their own view, hard-working and virtuous – feel they deserve their huge salaries and perks.

Lewis H. Lapham, Editor of Harper's Magazine, said: "Nobody ever has enough. It is characteristic of the rich, whether the rich man or the rich nation, to think that they never have enough of anything. Not enough love, time, houses, tennis balls, orgasms, dinner invitations, designer clothes, nuclear weapons. Even if we achieve what the world is pleased to acknowledge as success, we discover that the seizing of it fails to satisfy the hunger of our spiritual expectation, which is why we so often feel oppressed by... vague melancholy."

"The source of this vague melancholy lies in our childhood. We entered the world full of unconscious self-confidence, curiosity, enthusiasm and interest and delight in everything we encountered. We were untroubled by the belief that we needed to be good. Our joy in being alive was soon taken from us. The adults around us deemed that we must fit in schedules of eating, sleeping, urinating and defecating which they devised, not us. These schedules are beyond our understanding, yet if we fail to conform to them, unpleasant things can happen. We become confused, uncertain, and an emptiness, a darkness opens inside us. At the same time we are being offered things that we take to be compensation for the loss of the certitude and happiness we once enjoyed. 'Be good,' say our parents, 'and you'll be rewarded.' Money and possessions fail to assuage the pain of the loss of our initial certitude and happiness because we have invested them with a meaning they cannot bear. Every meaning is itself an expectation. If we give money the meaning that it creates happiness, we expect that it will do so. If the meaning that we create arises more from our fantasies than from our determination to create a significance that resembles, as closely as possible – reality, we create for ourselves expectations that can never be fulfilled.

I have spent many hours listening to individuals who live in daily anguish, waiting for their mother to put aside her usual way of behaving and reveal herself as the all-perfect, all-loving mother the person longs for. The reality is that the mother is a meagre person, untouched by the generosity and compassion that are necessary elements of an unconditional love. She can no more produce unconditional love than she can win the Nobel Prize for Physics or beat the market to make a fortune.

The expectation that money will fill the hole that childhood experience created in you

Acquiring more and more money can be an attempt to fill a void

A fistful of dollars: but it is characteristic of the rich, whether the rich man or the rich nation, to think that they never have enough of anything or that possessions will shore up your shaky sense of existence is wildly wrong. It is based as much on a lack of understanding of yourself as it is an overestimate of the powers of money and possessions. If we do not understand ourselves and if we do not try to set aside our fantasies in order to see life as it is, we cannot help but suffer.

Only when we understand ourselves can we appreciate and begin to create what might be a worthwhile, true value of money. "True" not in the sense of divinely decreed, an absolute value for ever and ever, but "true" in the sense of what value we can give to money that would not constantly threaten our survival, but instead would secure the survival of body and person.

© Dorothy Rowe, 1997. The Real Meaning of Money is published by HarperCollins on September 12

TOMORROW

If it's wrong to steal a million, is it wrong to steal a stapler? Dorothy Rowe on money and morality

The Open University BUSINESS/SCHOOL

MBA

Now you can gain an AMBA* approved MBA without disrupting your career - with the Open University Business School.

The school's teaching methods draw on the unrivalled expertise of the Open University and are supported by over 750 tutors offering group tuition and one-to-one feedback on work and assignments.

Our high quality texts, videos, audios and computing materials together with tutor support, informal study groups, day schools and residential schools have been given the highest rating of "Excellent" by the Higher Education Funding Council for England.

And over 10,000 managers have already studied for their MBA with the OUBS.

To find out why this is the most popular MBA programme in Europe call 01908 858585 (24 hours) for your prospectus, or complete and return the coupon.

Business is changing. Are you?

Send to: Course Reservations and Sales Centre, PO Box 826, Milton Keynes MK7 8AA

☐ Please send me your Management Development prospectus

Name

Position

Organisation

Address

Postcode Tel

OUBS Hotline 01908 858585
<http://oubs.open.ac.uk>

University education and training open to all adults

RE-ORGANISE YOUR FINANCES NOW

Is it time now... to look at your finances and make arrangements for a better future?

A secured loan from EPF could pay off your other loans and credit, spreading repayment over a longer term to make monthly outgoings manageable...

A simple FREE phone call is the first step to re-organising your finances. For a quick repayment guide, use this table.

APR%	MONTHLY REPAYMENTS WHEN YOU GO WITH EPF DIRECT FOR YOUR SECURED LOAN
10.5%	£20,000 291.10 323.85 397.76 638.09 £25,000 342.68 390.86 331.48 532.16 £30,000 384.07 435.93 285.19 425.29
11.4%	£20,000 278.88 308.06 340.27 379.79 £25,000 324.01 368.74 295.85 325.94 £30,000 368.87 413.16 337.20 317.03
12.4%	£20,000 277.87 306.99 338.19 378.58 £25,000 321.59 365.15 396.82 436.15 £30,000 364.43 408.43 431.22 470.77

* We recommend our optional Payment Protection Insurance which gives you peace of mind and covers repayment in the event of illness, accident or compulsory redundancy.

We have been providing secured personal loans for over 10 years and, as part of a major financial services group, you can be assured of our responsible lending and first class personal service.

0500 373 373
PHONE FREE TO APPLY - Any day 8 am to 10 pm

We will need your address, 'no proceeds' and some other simple details to enable us to send you an application form to sign and return.

no fees • no callers • no interviews • no obligation

Endeavour Personal Finance Ltd
PO Box No. 10147, LONDON N14 6LE
A SUBSIDIARY OF THE LLOYDS TSB GROUP

LOANS SECURED ON PROPERTY AVAILABLE TO UK MAINLAND HOMEOWNERS, 18 YEARS AND OVER, SUBJECT TO STATUS. WE WILL CONSIDER APPLICATIONS WITH CCJs (COUNTY COURT JUDGMENT) ON FIRST MORTGAGE ARREARS ON OUR OTHER COMPETITIVE TERMS. YOUR CREDIT CAN BE USED FOR ALMOST ANY PURPOSE. INFORMATION YOU GIVE MAY BE DISCLOSED TO A LICENSED CREDIT REFERENCE AGENCY WHICH WILL RETAIN A RECORD OF THE SEARCH. WRITTEN PERSONAL QUOTATIONS AVAILABLE ON REQUEST.

YOUR HOME IS AT RISK IF YOU DO NOT KEEP UP REPAYMENTS ON A MORTGAGE OR OTHER LOAN SECURED ON IT.

NEW! New Customer Voucher included
Reserve Your 1998 Deluxe Proof Set Now!

Royal Mint Issuing Price

£3 Voucher for New Collectors

• 1997 Deluxe Set still available • New Customer Voucher included

0345 220033 or Fax 01892 517883 your Order and Quote 88548/9

Switch or Credit Card payments only

With The Crown Collection Limited, P.O. Box 229, Royal Tunbridge Wells, Kent TN11 9AT Reg. No. 28786-44

Reservation & Order Form

YES ☐ I am a new customer and would like to reserve the 1998 Deluxe Proof Coin Set without commitment. I understand that I send no money now and MDM will contact me with the payment details prior to the issue date in 1998. (Reservation No. 49572-112).

YES ☐ I am a new customer and would like to order the 1997 UK Deluxe Proof Set (as illustrated) at the Royal Mint issue price of just £39.50. I will receive it post-free on 10 days' approval, during which time I may return it for a full refund. (Order No. 44284-120).

* New collectors will also receive a personalised new customer £3 Voucher which will be despatched separately. Redeemable with any other MDM purchase within 6 months, except £5 legal tender coins.

☐ I enclose a cheque/postal order for £39.50 made payable to MDM - The Crown Collection Readers

Mr/Miss/Mrs:

Account -

Address:

Postcode:

Only use our address for immediate delivery of 1997 coins within 28 days. All orders are subject to acceptance and terms.

MDM
The International Royal Mint Distributor
P.O. Box 229, Royal Tunbridge Wells, Kent, TN11 9AT
The Crown Collection Limited

Card No.

Exp Date

Switch ☐ Lame No. Signed: (I send over 18)

01908 858585

Connex aims to sidestep compensation

By FRASER NELSON

CONNEX RAIL, the French-owned train operator which this summer cancelled some 6,000 services on one of London's main commuter lines, is trying to escape compensating passengers up to £10 million for the fiasco by blaming the disruption on trade unions.

The company, which cancelled hundreds of trains in June after drivers refused to work overtime, wants the disruption erased from its Citizen's Charter scorecard on the grounds that it has no control over industrial action.

Opraf, the rail franchising office, is understood to be viewing the matter as a test case that will determine whether rail operators' liability for their own industrial relations.

Connex South Central, the franchise connecting London with Brighton, Hastings and Ashford, has agreed to Opraf-imposed penalties that total almost £1 million — equivalent to less than five days' subsidy.

The company is determined to avoid making any payments under the Citizen's Charter, which has the potential to trigger £10 million in compensation to season ticket holders. The Charter system generates discounts if performance levels fall below a set standard on an annual basis. On Connex South Central, discounts are due if fewer than 98 per cent of the scheduled trains run.

Connex said the industrial action struck 30 per cent of trains from its timetable. If this figure was entered for the 28-day period under dispute, the annual average would fall below the crucial 98 per cent threshold. This would trigger discounts for hundreds of season ticket holders.

Connex is arguing that Opraf must evaluate its performance against the emergency timetable that it drew up while the disruption was running. This would effectively delete the disruptions from the Citizen's Charter record books and avoid payments to passengers.

A spokesman for Opraf said that John O'Brien, franchising director, was treating the case as a matter of urgency. He said: "We have been in talks with Connex for some time now and we see no reason to treat them any differently than we would have treated British Rail. We intend to take a hard line."

However, Opraf has already agreed not to rank the disruptions as a "call in", the franchising director's equivalent of a yellow card. It actually paid Connex a bonus of £132,000 for the period under dispute, in addition to the £5.74 million monthly subsidy. It imposed a penalty of £41,500 for running too few carriages on the trains that it did run.

A spokesman for Aslef, the transport workers' union that called for the industrial action, said: "We have already told the franchising director that Connex brought this on their own heads because they would not properly negotiate with us in the first place. They refused to talk to us for three months before we complained to the franchising director."

Aslef called the industrial action over driver demands for a 37-hour working week that would consolidate the complex working practices that had existed under British Rail. It did not call a strike, but encouraged its members not to work hours officially classified as overtime or rest days.

The Connex affair dwarfs Stagecoach's high-profile South West Trains fiasco earlier this year. This involved 2,000 train cancellations over two months, while Connex figures suggest that it called off more than 6,000 trains in the space of 12 days.

The company, which operates under the slogan "Connex: The way to run a railway", confirmed that it was still in negotiations with Opraf but declined to comment further.

Ronnie Baird, right, with Michael Foot to whom he will report at the Bank of England

Lloyds TSB adviser leads Bank's supervision team

By JASON NISSE

THE BANK of England has recruited a senior adviser to Sir Brian Pittman, chairman of Lloyds TSB, to head its new quality assurance in banking supervision team.

Ronnie Baird, who has been with the banking group for 17 years, most recently as profitability analysis director, will join the banking regulation team in three weeks' time. Mr Baird will report directly to Michael Foot, executive director of banking regulation. The new role created by the Bank comes after the review of banking supervision by Arthur Andersen, the accountants, in the wake of the collapse in 1994 of Barings, the merchant bank.

The Bank was stung by the comments of the House of Commons Treasury Select Committee in its report into Barings, which argued that the regulator was too close to the banks it regulates.

Eddie George, Governor of the Bank of England, was also unhappy about the way that he was informed by Gordon Brown, the Chancellor, that the Bank would lose its regulatory role.

Mr Baird will lead a team of six, recruiting two more from outside the Bank. They will review the supervision of 360 banks and representative offices regulated by the Bank.

The role is expected to continue when banking supervision moves to the new regulatory authority to cover all financial markets, which is to be led by Howard Davies, the former Deputy Governor of the Bank.

Mr Baird expects the quality assurance team to work closely with the frontline regulators to review their procedures, transferring good practices used by one team across the board and eliminating any lapses of best practice.

"We need to be an integral part of the bloodstream," said Mr Baird. "We have to have some degree of independence but I would consider it a failure if we have to act in an independent manner in any cases."

Mr Baird expects to hire two outsiders quite soon — one probably from a big accountancy firm and another from a bank. Of the three bank employees in the team one will be relatively senior, while the other two are expected to be young high-flyers.

Tense round of pay talks likely as rises accelerate

By CHRISTINE BUCKLEY, INDUSTRIAL CORRESPONDENT

AUTUMN pay talks are likely to be tense and could bring accelerating pay rises, a leading employment research group predicts.

Steep rises in several pockets of the country are already fuelling a general upturn in settlements. Pay has shot up by 15-20 per cent in some instances, the Bank of England revealed in its latest Inflation Report, as tight labour markets force higher settlements.

Incomes Data Services, the research group, now says that "autumn pay negotiations could prove difficult". It said: "The Ford pay negotiations for November may be especially fraught." In a report today IDS says: "Tighter labour markets are emerging in key areas of the country and there are exceptional pay rises being awarded for certain kinds of employees where there are skill shortages such as in construction and IT." The autumn round of pay talks may also reflect the recent increase in inflation to 3.3 per cent in July.

According to local agents for the Bank of England who monitor business conditions, IT staff and building work managers are commanding the highest levels. In areas where unemployment is low most levels of workers are able to negotiate sharp pay rises with unskilled employees getting double-digit increases.

A spokesman for IDS said that employers in some areas of the South East, particularly Cambridge, were facing "a major headache" in recruiting staff. Cambridge, which has an unemployment rate of just over 2 per cent, was highlighted in the latest regional roundup by the Bank. Agents found that starting salaries for clerical staff were 10 per cent higher than a year ago.

Average levels of pay increases are also edging up. IDS finds in its latest compilation of settlements. Pay deals are expected to be in the 3-5 per cent range over the next few months after having been in the 3-4 per cent band over the past year.

Settlements which have recently broken the 4 per cent level and which indicate higher rises to come include the 4.3 per cent increase awarded to clerical and engineering staff at BT and the 4.5 per cent rise for Rover Group employees. Westair has given its staff a 4.9 per cent increase.

IDS said the higher awards "may be due to a combination of factors including higher inflation, falling unemployment, the four successive rises in mortgage rates since May and the measures announced in the July Budget."

The uneven pattern of unemployment will be a difficult obstacle for the Government when it implements its Welfare to Work programme, the IDS said. In the Crawley travel-to-work area, which includes Gatwick, unemployment is running at 1.7 per cent, while in South Tyneside the rate is 12.8 per cent.

Currency fears in Far East

Local investors fear further losses in some Far East stock markets. In spite of support operations, as mutual fundholders withdraw after share price falls between 7 and 15 per cent last week.

But most London dealers see little reason to transfer this break in sentiment to Europe. Wall Street is officially closed for Labour Day.

Polyfilla plan

Williams Holdings is considering selling its home-improvement range, which includes top brands such as Polycell, Polyfilla and Cuprinol, and could raise £900 million. ICI is among favourites to buy but Williams is not in talks at present.

Yorkshire sale

Yorkshire Group is expected to announce the sale of its leather and chemicals division today. Front-runners include BTP, the specialist chemicals and safety equipment group. Yorkshire wants to focus on its core dyes operation.

Bae pursuit

British Aerospace is chasing export sales worth more than £10 billion pounds for fighter aircraft alone, it said in Aircraft yesterday. It did not expect to be hit by any arms sales restriction under Britain's new "ethical" foreign policy.

Tomorrow
Janet Bush says the Mexican crisis and its aftermath have lessons for Far East economies

Wednesday
Companies that cheat on charity.

Thursday
Brown Maddox, right, on how BT may still be suffering delusions about MCI

Friday
Anatole Kaletsky's unique Economic View

Strong pound not for ever, says George

THE recent strength of sterling is not likely to be sustained in the long run, Eddie George, Governor of the Bank of England, said yesterday.

"We've got an exchange rate that is clearly stronger than we think could be sustained in the longer term," Mr George told economists at a conference in Wyoming sponsored by the Federal Reserve Bank of Kansas City.

He said that sterling's strength in foreign-exchange markets was due to factors "beyond our control". "I think you cannot find the perfect solution to that, so you actually have to hold on until that situation resolves itself," Mr George said. "But I think in doing that you have to focus on the main objective, which is maintaining long-term price stability and the sustainability and growth of the economy."

Coutts & Co

Notice of Interest Rates for Private and Business Clients effective from 1st September 1997

	gross interest rate p.a.	gross compounded annual rate (C.A.R.)
Current and Deposit Accounts for Private Clients
Current Account with Cash Management Option and Reserve Account*
£100,000+	5.125%	5.224%
£50,000-£99,999	4.80%	4.88%
£20,000-£49,999	4.00%	4.06%
£5,000-£19,999	3.50%	3.55%
TESSA*
Charity TESSA*	7.00%	7.18%
	6.30%	6.45%
Deposit Accounts for Private and Business Clients
Three Month Reserve Account*
£50,000+	6.375%	6.529%
£25,000-£49,999	5.25%	5.35%
£10,000-£24,999	4.75%	4.84%
7 Day Notice Deposit Account*
	1.00%	1.00%
Deposit Accounts for Business Clients
Reserve Accounts for Businesses/Charities/Societies*
£250,000-£1 million	4.35%	4.42%
£100,000-£249,999	4.20%	4.26%
£25,000-£99,999	4.00%	4.06%
£10,000-£24,999	3.50%	3.39%

*Interest is paid quarterly. Interest is paid half-yearly.
†Interest is paid only on the portion of the cleared balance which exceeds £5,000.

- Interest is payable on Reserve Account balances below the minimum level at a gross rate of 1% p.a. (Gross C.A.R. 1%).
- Interest will be paid after deducting tax (where applicable) at the prescribed rate.
- The gross compounded annual rate is the rate where gross interest payments are retained on the account during the year.
- We are also able to place sterling and other currencies in the Money Markets. All rates are subject to variation.

440 Strand, London WC2R 0QS
Telephone: 0171-753 1000

COUTTS GROUP IS THE GLOBAL PRIVATE BANKING ARM OF NATWEST GROUP

Hurn likely to move in as chairman of GEC

By JON ASHWORTH

SIR ROGER HURN, chairman of Smiths Industries, maker of aircraft electronics and medical instruments, has emerged as front-runner to succeed Lord Prior as chairman of GEC, the fast-reshaping electronics and defence group.

Sir Roger, 59, would take his place alongside George Simpson, the GEC managing director, who is leading the group into a new, post-Lord Weinstock, era. Lord Prior, a long-standing former Cabinet minister, is due to retire by March 1998. Possible successors mentioned have included Michael Heseltine, former Deputy Prime Minister.

The soon-to-be ennobled Mr Simpson has said his successor will be "an industrialist, not a politician". Executive directors of Smiths Industries traditionally retire when they reach 60. Sir Roger, who turns 60 in June, has a ready successor in Keith Butler-Wheelhouse, brought in as chief executive last year from Saab Automotive. Mr Simpson and Sir Roger are non-executive directors of ICI, and meet on a regular basis. Sir Roger was unavailable yesterday.

Sir Iain Vallance, the chairman of British Telecom, was among one-time contenders for the role of figurehead at GEC, which is undergoing sweeping changes under Mr Simpson's reforming hand. It has a new finance director in John Mayo, who joins from Zeneca, and has parted with a number of non-executive directors, including Lord Rees-Mogg, who bows out this month. Recent departures include Sir Richard Needham, the former Trade and Industry Minister.

Sir Roger became managing director of Smiths in 1978, and was made chief executive three years later. Under his stewardship, Smiths has been transformed into one of the UK's leading industrial groups, winning a place in the FT-SE 100 index.

Smiths has received 85.2 per cent acceptance in its agreed £136 million offer for Graseby, the medical devices and monitoring group. The offer closes on September 12, pending approval from the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Ofgas to make suppliers sell ethically on doorstep

By CHRISTINE BUCKLEY, INDUSTRIAL CORRESPONDENT

GAS SUPPLY companies are to be saddled with a good-behaviour clause for marketing in their licences as their regulator acts to stem aggressive sales tactics.

Clare Spottiswoode, head of Ofgas, the regulator, is working on plans to make responsible marketing part of licence requirements, rather than leave doorstep ethics to the conscience of companies. Detailed plans are expected to be announced in the next few weeks. A spokesman for Ofgas said: "The opening of competition to 17 million homes needs more than just guidelines."

Penalties for transgressing the marketing condition are likely to include compensation for customers.

The code will be devised from voluntary guidelines set out by industry bodies such as the Gas Forum. It will include the need for companies to audit every response from customers to ensure that they are sure of what they have signed.

Aggressive marketing in an area that is not fully understood by a large number of customers has sullied domestic gas competition since the programme was started last year. Pushy sales techniques by SwedGas in southwest England — the first area opened to competition — led to a stream of complaints to trading standards officials and intervention by the Office of Fair Trading. Eastern Natural Gas, part of The Energy Group, has also been criticised for its sales methods in southeast England, where competition began early this year.

The industry has made attempts to regulate itself over marketing, with the creation of the Association of Energy Suppliers — a mixture of gas and electricity suppliers. The AES has produced a code of conduct, though not all companies have signed up to the association.

The Gas Consumers Council has begun a monthly league table of shame comparing customer complaints against the companies operating in competitive areas. Complaints recently reported to the council include salespeople wrongly telling households that British Gas was either going out of business or running out of gas.

Hoping to be richer — thanks to Richer

By CHRIS AYRES

JULIAN RICHER, the maverick multimillionaire who founded the Richer Sounds hi-fi chain, has thrown his financial weight behind a tiny Bristol clothes company run by a 23-year-old entrepreneur.

He decided to back the company after walking into its tiny 17 sq metre shop by chance to buy a pair of trousers. "When he walked in I went weak at the knees," Luke Bream, the founder of the company, appropriately named Keep Your Pants On, said. "I had read his book and was a big fan. He bought a load of clothes and we got talking. Then the next day he phoned and invited me to show him a business plan over breakfast."

Mr Bream's passion for clothes and entrepreneurial spirit led him to set up the company two years ago with £2,500 cash, his brother's student loan and 40 pairs of trousers. Mr Richer has agreed to buy a 51 per cent stake, with Mr Bream keeping the right to buy back 11 per cent after debts have been paid. Next week the company will open a specially designed 1,000 sq metre shop in Bristol. Another is expected to open in Edinburgh before Christmas. KYPO aims to open up 50 outlets in the next ten years while building up

Blood Inc. its own brand of men's clothing.

"Every Friday I will send Mr Richer some thoughts and he will get back to me every Monday," says Mr Bream. "He's a mentor really. Normally, I would have to make so many mistakes on my own, but I have all the expertise at hand."

Mr Richer is famous for rewarding his employees by lending them his Rolls-Royce and giving them free holidays. His management style has attracted attention from a number of companies, including Asda, Sears and Halifax, and he has recently set up a consultancy business.

Luke Bream started with £2,500 and 40 pairs of trousers

TOURIST RATES

	Bank Buys	Bank Sells
Australia $	2.32	2.14
Austria Sch	21.51	19.85
Belgium F	63.57	58.47
Canada S	2.276	2.188
Cyprus Cyp	0.903	0.832
Denmark Kr	11.68	10.80
Finland Mk	9.32	8.57
France Fr	10.28	9.50
Germany M	3.08	2.94
Greece Dr	495	446
Hong Kong S	13.34	12.14
Iceland L	127	107
Ireland P	1.15	1.08
Israel Sh	6.02	5.37
Italy Lit	2078	1920
Japan Yen	209.63	192.10
Malta M	0.671	0.612
Netherlands Gld	3.473	3.178
New Zealand $	2.69	2.45
Norway Kr	12.85	11.71
Portugal Esc	308.53	286.30
S Africa R	8.31	7.55
Spain Ptas	257.29	236.50
Sweden Kr	13.54	12.44
Switzerland Fr	2.66	2.44
Turkey Lira	27893	25925
USA $	1.726	1.692

Rates for small denomination banknotes only as supplied by Barclays Bank. Different rates apply to travellers' cheques. Rates as at close of trading on Friday.

The storm clouds are gathering over Europe. The Bundesbank is under pressure to increase German interest rates. It has a chance to raise its market intervention rates tomorrow and official rates at its council meeting on Thursday. This week it will probably hold back, but not for long.

On the face of it, it seems difficult to believe the Bundesbank might be thinking of raising rates at all. Large parts of the European economy are downright weak. But as the Bundesbank has demonstrated on numerous occasions, although it is the de facto central bank for Europe, it acts in the interests of Germany.

Yet even the German case for higher interest rates is not straightforward. Consumers are still nervous and German companies, never mind foreign ones, are leery of investing in the country, given its ridiculously high labour costs. So domestic demand will not grow much this year. Most alarmingly, unemployment, currently stuck at

Strong mark will give euro a fighting chance

4.4 million, a postwar high, shows no sign of coming down. But German inflation is starting to look worrying. The next set of figures are likely to show it at 2.1 per cent, not exactly rampant but higher, for this year's weakness of the mark has caused a sharp rise in import costs. Inflation is already higher in Germany than in Italy and Spain. Enough said?

Moreover, because Germany is going through a serious and drawn-out phase of job shedding, the unemployment figures are a wholly misleading guide to the state of the economy and the degree of inflationary pressure. The mark's weakness has had a strongly beneficial effect on Germany's exports. As a result, far from languishing in recession, the German economy is likely to grow this year by well over 2 per cent.

Even so, you might argue, why does the Bundesbank not conduct the sort of experiment that the Fed appears to have been doing, that is to say, trying out whether the economy can now operate at higher rates of capacity and faster growth without generating inflation — what you might call giving the death of inflation the benefit of the doubt?

The answer is partly that the Bundesbank is operating with a lower implicit inflation target than the Fed and is more single-mindedly pursuing an inflation objective. Moreover, the Bundesbank has to contend with the effects of a weak currency, while the Fed has benefited from the effects of a strong currency.

But more importantly, there is more reason to believe that the US can experience a new era in economic performance. It has gone further than any other country in adapting to the new world of information technology and global networks, helped by massive investment spending, and its labour market is intensely competitive. By contrast, although adjustment is well under way in Germany, it is still far back in the process. There is also a European reason for higher German rates. The Bundesbank is not Eurosceptic in the way of the British striped blazer and staring eyes brigade. It is not hooked on monetary sovereignty. But it is clear that if the mark is to be given up, then it must not be for a mess of pottage. Its duty is to do all it can to ensure that the euro will be a worthy replacement for the mark.

ROGER BOOTLE

Its hope, if not the French Government's, was that the euro would be a sort of mark writ large. But the markets are now operating on the assumption that the euro will be a weak currency. If the closing months of the mark are characterised by weakness on the exchanges and apparent acquiescence in rising German inflation, then the Bundesbank will have sold the pass. The Bundesbankers might not be able to prevent the euro from going ahead on a bad basis, and before Europe is ready for it, but at least they can ensure that the mark goes out on a good note, thereby giving the euro the best possible chance and protecting their own reputations. That means raising rates.

Suppose they do, what will the consequences be? Potentially this could pose a serious threat to EMU. For the French economy is in a different position from that of Germany. The signs of recovery are not as persuasive in France and although unemployment rate has just edged down, at 12.5 per cent it remains dire. Moreover, the jobs issue is more explosive than in Germany. France needs higher interest rates like a hole in the head.

Yet higher German rates would surely oblige France to follow. If she did not then the markets might well attack the franc. But suppose the markets saw German rates continuing to rise, which would be all the more likely if American rates also go up. Then, even if France followed the first German move, this would still leave the franc exposed to speculation as the markets reasoned that even higher rates were unsustainable for France. It would be like the position facing the British authorities as the ERM crisis reached its height in 1992 — damned if they did raise rates, and damned if they didn't.

For British exporters struggling with the strong pound, higher German rates could provide some relief, allowing sterling to fall against the mark and, provided the link with the franc held, against the wider mark bloc as well. If the franc link broke, however, then it would be a very different story.

Autumn is almost upon us. It is the season of mellow fruitfulness — especially for foreign exchange traders.

Doubters moved Green to take digital TV risk

Award-winning media writer Raymond Snoddy joins The Times today with an exclusive interview.

Michael Green, the chairman of Carlton Communications, one of the UK's largest media groups, remembers when he realised just how important digital terrestrial television (DTT) was going to be for the future of British broadcasting.

It was at a dinner hosted by Virginia Bottomley, then Heritage Secretary, at Hampton Court Palace two years ago. What impressed the 49-year-old Carlton chairman was that virtually all the guests and good of the British broadcasting industry there were sceptical about the business potential of DTT, which allows new digital television channels to be broadcast from ordinary transmitters and received on standard roof-top aerials.

Green, the largest player in ITV through Carlton Television in London and Central Independent Television in the Midlands, had already been looking carefully at DTT. "But what led me to feel so strongly was that there were so many doubting Thomases. There were so many people who were negative about it and a couple sitting on the fence," said Green who, over his 30-year business career, has turned a £2,000 overdraft into the £3 billion Carlton Communications, whose interests include Technicolor in the US. During the discussion Green spotted that both the Government and the BBC were enthusiastic about DTT, which is now expected to offer about 40 new UK television channels from next autumn.

"As a businessman I thought that when you have the Government, the Secretary of State (Mrs Bottomley) and the national broadcaster, the cornerstone of British television in the BBC, positive about a product it has a good chance of success and we had to embrace it," Green said in a rare newspaper interview.

So while many UK broadcasters remained sceptical about how DTT would fare with 200 channels of digital satellite and digital cable expected to be launched at the same time, Green pressed on and the company he founded, British Digital Broadcasting (BDB), won the main commercial DTT franchise.

BDB is now a Carlton-Granada equal partnership. The Independent Television Commission (ITC) ruled that British Sky Broadcasting, the satellite television venture in which News International, owner of The Times, has a 40 per cent stake, could not be a one-third equity partner, although it should remain a programme supplier.

Michael Green says that one day everybody will be watching TV via digital signals

"DTT is definitely going to happen. This is not a new venture that may or may not exist. Everybody in this country at some future point will be watching television via digital signals. This is a fact. All we are debating is how quickly this is going to happen," said Green, whose voice rises at least an octave when DTT is mentioned.

One of the reasons why Green is so confident that DTT will be a success is his belief that Chris Smith, the Culture, Media and Sports Secretary, is as much an enthusiast as Mrs Bottomley and will take action to ensure that it works. "The Government is going to turn off the analogue signal. They are going to announce at some point when they are going to turn off the analogue signal. Chris Smith has asked how he can help us on digital terrestrial," said Green.

The last Government made it clear it wanted all broadcasters to move to digital and vacate the analogue frequencies to make way for more lucrative mobile communications. It stopped short of setting a date because of the political sensitivity of telling the entire population they must eventually get new television sets or digital "black boxes" if they want to watch television. Instead, the policy was to review the situation in five years, or when 50 per cent of the country has digital receivers, whichever comes first.

The Carlton chairman believes the Culture Secretary is now seriously considering setting a date for the move, just as the Federal Communications Commission has already done in the US.

Green believes that digital satellite will be a profitable business — he is less certain whether cable television will make it — but that DTT will be the main distribution route, bringing multichannel television to the majority of the population.

They will begin by watching free-to-air digital channels, such as 24-hour television news from the BBC and ITV2, and gradually move to subscription channels such as Sky Sports and Sky Movies, which will be part of the BDB package.

"Over half the country will be watching DTT and that is over ten million homes. The question is when. I am not man phlegmatically. But what if DTT should turn out to be the sort of success story Green believes? How would that affect ITV — Carlton's current prime source of profit?

Green believes that ITV will remain strong and that its ability to reach the entire population will remain its unique selling point.

"If you launch a product, you know that if you go on ITV you will get the whole country in under five days. You launch a product on satellite, cable and DTT — never." The Carlton chairman believes that as the audience continues to fragment through new digital services a channel like ITV, which can deliver large audiences, will be even more valuable than it was historically, though the absolute numbers will be lower.

Green argues that the consolidation, which means that ITV is dominated by three companies — Carlton, Granada and United News & Media — has led to greater operation and much less infighting than in the past.

"We don't compete. This is the great myth. I want more Prime Suspects and Crackers," said Green in a reference to prize-winning Granada series. He is also pleased by the appointment of Richard Eyre, former chief executive of Capital Radio, as chief executive of ITV and insists he will be given the independence to manage despite the size of the egos looking over his shoulder. "You don't have a very good manager and then try to second-guess him. As long as he is successful he is our man," said Green, who with Gerry Robinson, chairman of Granada, controls 67 per cent of ITV.

Next on the agenda is the future of News at Ten, a sensitive issue for Green, who is a director and shareholder in the news organisation. The issue of moving News at Ten to an earlier slot so that films are not split in two is clearly under discussion in ITV.

"Provided ITV is united in what it wants, and provided ITV has a good reason to do it — I want to be convinced — I think the regulator (the ITC) will not be standing in our way," said Green, choosing his words carefully.

As for Carlton programmes, Green concedes he is never happy with critics, although he insists he pays more attention to viewers than critics. "The programme we took most flak on originally was Hollywood Wives. It has gone on to become one of the most successful genres of programmes," said Green.

He is also unrepentant about the great monarchy debate, which caused a furore, although with hindsight he concedes a smaller panel might have been a good idea.

"As a viewer I was entertained. I watched it through-out. I think it was groundbreaking," said Green. He thinks the 25 million calls generated will probably make the Guinness Book of Records.

"Despite the stick I absolutely don't regret it and I made that known publicly to the Carlton Television staff," said Green, who added that the challenge now is to find a new subject for similar television treatment. But mostly these days Michael Green wants to talk about digital terrestrial television. "It is a very exciting time. There is a real buzz about the place," he said.

There is also a new buzz about Michael Green, with a big new project for Carlton to tackle now that the go-go acquisition days are over and the emphasis is on building the business for the long term.

Iceland poised to return to the black with £25m

ICELAND: The food retailer reported its first drop in profits for 26 years for its last full year, but there are signs of more confident trading with tomorrow's interim results.

Market forecasts for the group are for profits of about £25 million pre-tax in the weaker half of the year, compared with £29.8 million last time, and a net dividend unchanged at 1.8p. Earnings figures, rising about 8 per cent to 6.93p a share, will reflect recent capital restructuring.

HILLSDOWN: Debate persists on the conglomerate's mixture of housing, furniture and food interests, ranging from Typhoo Tea to Buxted Chickens, but only minor disposals look imminent. On Thursday, Fairview, the homes business, should virtually double half-year profits to £38 million. A flat group performance is forecast, with pre-tax profits of £52 million (£51.5 million), earnings up a shade to 5.5p and an unchanged dividend.

BURMAH CASTROL: The strength of the pound is expected to have hit the oil group, due to report today.

REPORTING THIS WEEK

Adjusted net profit is forecast to show a slight improvement on last year's £67.7 million, with top of the range estimates of £72 million. A dividend of 13p, up 1p, is expected.

HOUSEBUILDERS: A series of generally upbeat reports from top housebuilders should start today with Persimmon. Interim figures are expected to show pre-tax profits climbing from £14.2 million to £21 million. Earnings per share are likely to have grown 42 per cent to 9.4p, with the payout up 5 per cent to 3.1p.

After an £8.7 million loss this time last year, George Wimpey, biggest in the industry, should report a half-year surplus of £10-£20 million tomorrow, with operating profits up from £2.7 million to £20 million. The loss per share of 1.6p should be reversed.

Completions should be similar to last year's, with Wimpey Homes up about 10 per cent, but McLean down. Crucially, both should have managed higher selling prices. A dividend of 3.15p, up 5 per cent, is hoped for. Wilson (Connolly) is expected to show about £10 million pre-tax profits on turnover of £125 million, when it reports on Wednesday. The dividend should be up 7 per cent at 1.45p.

AMEC, the recovering construction group that also owns Fairclough Homes, should report profits up a quarter to £15 million on Thursday, with the payout up a sixth at 1.75p.

LAIRD GROUP: Start-up costs of £4 million and a £6 million hit from the strong pound will dent half-year figures on Thursday.

Pre-tax profits should be little changed from last year's £33.4 million, with earnings also static at about 17p. The interim dividend could rise a tenth to 5.4p.

ECONOMICS: Today Standard & Poor's MMS International forecasts consumer credit growth slowing a little from £1.3 billion in June to £1.1 billion in July. Growth in M0, the measure of narrow money supply, is also expected to slow, from an annual 5.9 per cent to 5.4 per cent.

TODAY

Interim: Avonside, Bursi, Burmah Castrol, Core Group, DCS, Gowing, Kerry, Lifford, Perkins Foods, Persimmon, Christie Siddons, Singer & Friedlander, Finsla: Brit Alcon, Haynes Publishing, Roxapur. Economic statistics: August provisional M0; July final M4; July consumer credit; US markets shut.

TOMORROW

Interim: CMG, CRH, Dixon Motors, James Finlay, Iceland, IML, Lambert Horwath, Paramo, Paramount Foods, Peak, PPL Therapeutics, Sage Grp, Sero Grp, Stadium Grp, Trafalgar, George Wimpey, Zambis Consolidated Copper (41). Finsla: Peter

RESULTS AND STATISTICS

Black, Heritage Bathrooms, Macro 4. Economic statistics: Halifax August house price survey; August official reserves.

WEDNESDAY

Interim: Arrey, James Beattie, Burford Holdings, Cairn Energy, Church & Co, Evans Heston, Hickson International, IFS, Jefferson Smurfit, JLI, Johnston Press, Mithras IT, Pagaya, Parildard, Regal Hotel, Vardon, Waterford Wedgwood, Wilson (Connolly). Economic statistics: US July leading indicators.

THURSDAY

Interim: Abbot Grp, Amec, Castles, Churchill China, Conister Trust, Farnes Int, Friendly Hotels, Hilldown, HSBC China Fund, IBC, Laird, Lase-Scan Holdings, Pelon, Royal Doulton, Soholl, Soma, Silvermines, SkyePharma, Wembley, Swallowfield. Finsla: Brierley Investments, Pacific Horizon, JD Wetherspoon. Economic statistics: July construction orders; SMMT August car registrations.

FRIDAY

Interim: Hammarson, Heniya, Lino Supplies, Vico, Arthur Wood & Son. Economic statistics: July housing starts; Q2 construction output.

PARIBAS IS PLEASED TO ANNOUNCE IT HAS MOVED ITS LONDON PREMISES TO:
10 HAREWOOD AVENUE LONDON
NW1 6AA

TELEPHONE
0171 595 2000

FAX
0171 595 2555

 PARIBAS

Why are classical music and opera so uniquely favoured on Radio 3? Surely there ought to be comparable space and investment in literature, history, the arts and sciences and philosophy. The BBC has a great opportunity to enrich and intensify the best in our culture.

This is not a column which aims to bash Radio 3. As a true-born Brit I inherit, of course, the inalienable right to grumble about the BBC, and I have some grumbles about Radio 3 which still seems mired in old marmalade too often. But over the past month, when my normal listening time has been trebled, I have got the value of a licence fee from that one station alone. Nor is this to knock Radio 4, which is an exemplary talk channel, nor to say that something should go to make way for a new entry at the BBC. It is to suggest an add-on, a new radio channel, which would address history, the sciences, literature etc as exhaustively and intelligently as Radio 3 addresses great music.

When, for instance, was the last time you heard the entire canon of Shakespeare's works read aloud or performed on radio? Why could a chapter of Dickens not be read night after night throughout one year, followed by Balzac, Waugh, Tolstoy, Bellow? Would it not be rewarding to feature a programme of lectures in history and the sciences, lectures which would feature the brightest of our university teachers?

Tune in to Radio Shakespeare

This seems to be no less possible than the hours and hours of classical music on which we are currently fed. Had anyone, before the invention of the Third Programme, said that in quite a short time there would be 24 hours a day of classical music from the most arcane and antique to the most modern and contemporary, and that this would secure a place in the broadcasting spectrum, it would have been laughed off the agenda. Many indeed would have thought the suggestion an affront to the British people's cherished philistinism and traditional non-musicality. Yet! Thanks to the BBC we are now one of the most musically active, musically literate countries in the world.

Why can the same not be done for literature, the arts, history, the sciences and philosophy? The BBC spends considerable resources on news, on sport, on popular culture, on digital television, on world television, and good luck to it. Could not a comparatively very modest sum be found to take broadcasting culture where it has never gone before?

The Open University is a useful comparison. On Monday mornings I used to listen to the OU lecture between 6.30 and 7am (before the slot was filled — with classical music). More often than not I knew very little indeed about the course being discussed. More often than not I stuck with it and got something out of it. How much more likely to stay if a programme scheduled were to be built, not around an Open University syllabus, but around the syllabus of the Open Mind? Tony Blair's determination to make Britain the best-educated country in the world needs to be applauded and supported, and what better national institution to support that essential ambition and at the same time prove its own best worth than the BBC?

MELVYN BRAGG

It is not difficult to see it working. Beethoven, Mozart, Stravinsky, Monteverdi, they are played again and again, they are repeated, they are discussed. We go deep into the past to revive dead composers sometimes better left there, but still Radio 3 is a channel with a purpose. Why on earth can we not have a channel with the purpose of affording the highest opportunities in thought and language for anyone who cares to listen?

There could be daily lectures from around the country, lectures on our own history, on world history, on sciences. Most people who go to university — and more and more now do — know the pleasure of nipping into a lecture which has nothing to do with one's own course. There is an appetite for listening and learning in this country now, as anyone who goes to literary festivals or local history societies or, especially, public lectures about science will attest.

It need not be all readings and lectures. There could be discussions, debates, link-ups with Europe and the East and the Americas. Nor need it be plod.

This week in THE TIMES

OPERA

ENO's new season opens with Rosalind Plowright singing Tosca
OPENS: Sat, Coliseum
REVIEW: Monday

THEATRE

Full of sound and fury Alan Howard tackles King Lear
OPENS: Fri, Old Vic
REVIEW: Monday

FILM

We are not amused! Judi Dench is Queen Vic in Mrs Brown
RELEASED: Friday REVIEW: Thursday

MUSIC

The Royal Concertgebouw under Riccardo Chailly performs at the Proms
CONCERTS: Tues and Wed
REVIEWS: Thurs and Fri

Dazzled by the future

EDINBURGH FESTIVAL: At last, says Richard Morrison, here is progressive music that makes sense

Sometimes, alas too rarely, a critic stumbles across a new work that is so ingeniously conceived, so mesmerising, so far ahead of the rest of the field, that the only immediate response is a dropped jaw, a dazed grin and a gulped croak of "bravo". I entered the Royal Lyceum with no great expectations of Black on White, a "music theatre piece for 18 players" written last year by the 45-year-old German composer, Heiner Goebbels. Seventy-five thrilling minutes later I staggered out with renewed faith in the musical avant-garde. Once every decade or so, the progressives do actually manage to make a bit of significant progress. I guess that Black on White is it for the Nineties.

On a stage packed with dozens of bare benches, the players are required to be both conventional musicians and unconventional actors in a series of enigmatic tableaux. Some are funny and quirky. There is a marvellous hard-driven rock opening, for instance, with half the instrumentalists playing the music and the other half playing mad games of badminton, skittles and dice. Some are whimsical and poignant, such as the scene in which a lonely piccolo player conveys a haunting lament while waiting for his kettles to boil. And others are downright menacing: there is a terrifying moment when an entire brass band advances on the audience, bench by bench, while repeatedly hammering out two baleful chords.

Shadow play: Heiner Goebbels's stunning "music theatre piece for 18 players" mixes hard rock, big-band jazz, African chant — and dark, deep elegy

Described in this piece as a memorial for the German theatre director and writer Heiner Müller, and a recording of the dying of the light, or the human spirit transcending some crushing misery or terror. But when, near the end, the entire ensemble sits in silence and watches a metal pendulum, suspended from the stage roof, eerily strum back and forth across the strings of a Japanese koto, the feeling of being drawn into some timeless ritual of mourning is overwhelming.

To evoke such intense emotional states Goebbels draws on a huge range of musical styles: everything from big-band jazz and Hungarian-style cimbalom music to African chant and appearances by a didgeridoo and an air-raid siren. His staging is no less eclectic, mixing classic Expressionist effects — shadows, silhouettes, bare bulbs — with stunning group comes in which the musical ensemble moves with the precision of a well-drilled ballet company.

In less competent hands, such a collision of disparate elements would be a mess. But this synthesis of music, mime, lighting, projection, speech and electronic sound is marshalled with dazzling assurance. And executed — by the magnificently versatile players of the Frankfurt-based Ensemble Modern — with the total conviction that comes from having lived with the composer through the creation of the work.

The trouble with presenting such a piece on the final two nights of the Edinburgh Festival is that it makes much of what has gone before sound desperately hackneyed. Especially other pieces of new music. For instance, earlier on Friday the BBC Scottish Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Martyn Brabbins and abetted by the virtuoso flautist Pierre-Yves Arlaud, gave the world premiere of Blisschlag by the Scottish composer James Dillon — which, at 30 minutes' length, must be the most protracted "bolt of lightning" in the history of the Universe.

Dillon is one of the so-called "New Complexity" composers, though there is nothing remotely new about his brand of impenetrable density. Massive scores in which dozens of instruments plough through mathematical formulae. In order to illustrate some esoteric strand of German philosophy have been emptying concert halls for most of this century. The Usher Hall on Friday was no exception.

The sadness is that Dillon clearly has an excellent ear for unusual and striking orchestral sonorities. Has he no true friend who will gently but firmly dissuade him from trudging ever further up the blind alley of obscurantism?

OPERA & BALLET

COLESLIDE 020 6300 (day)
COLESLIDE NATIONAL OPERA
Sat 7.30 (First Night) TOSCA

ROYAL OPERA HOUSE
Central Gardens
Sat 8.00 (day) TOSCA
Not valid on tickets purchased from the reduced-price outlets
"Advance booking for day"
0171 739 0449

THE ROYAL BALLET
THE ROYAL OPERA
NEW SEASON 1997-98
For tickets, dates & prices go to please call 0171 212 9123
To book call 0171 304 4000

THEATRES

ADRIAN PHILIP
020 344 0055/020 1250 (day) 1145
CHICAGO
THE DROP DEAD MUSICAL
HENRY WOODMAN
Presents from 28 Oct Opening 18 Nov

ALBERT 360 1730/44 4444
Mon-Sat 8.30 Sat 8.30
"Perfect" D. Exp
MICHAEL ELPHICK
"Delicious" E. Sat
in BERNARD SHAW'S PYGMALION

"IRRESISTIBLE" F.T.

REDUCED SHAKESPEARE COMPANY
ALL 57 PLAYS IN 97 MINUTES

0171 369 1747

THEATRES

ALDWYCH 0171 416 8008
0171 420 0200 (day) 1145
ALAN BATES
"Magnificent performance... one of the best of his career" D. Tel

LIFE SUPPORT
A new play by SHAWN GRAY
"Entertaining, witty, humorous" S. Tel
"HAROLD PINTER'S masterpiece and a superb performance" Tel.
Sat 8.00 Mon-Sat 8.00 Sat 8.00

APOLLO 24hr 0171 494 5370
0171 344 4444 (day) 1145
Gips 0171 494 5454
HEINER GOEBBELS

POP/ROCK

"Electrifying... absolutely outstanding... a masterpiece of modern music" S. Tel
"A powerful, dramatic, powerful... a masterpiece of modern music" S. Tel
FULLY AIR CONDITIONED THEATRE
Mon-Sat 8.00pm
Mon-Sat 8.00pm

APOLLO LAMAR 80 0171 416 8008
0171 416 8008 (day) 1145
4444 420 0000 Gips 416 8075
Telephone 0200 614 805

SUMMER HOLIDAY
"The Little Prince" D. Exp
"A beautiful performance" D. Exp
"A beautiful performance" D. Exp
Mon-Sat 7.30 Wed & Sat 8.30
Wed 8.30 Mon-Sat 8.30

DOMINION 0171 638 1865/0200
2020/0200 2020/0200 0200 0200
(day) 1145 Gips 0171 416 8008/0171
312 1897/0200 014005
London's best value in live music
DISCO'S

STANLEY EXPRESS
THE PLAYERS
White House Lane 18.45 day
Tue & Sat 8pm Tickets from £12.50

ARTS WCL 0171 838 3444
National Youth Theatre presents
Two Men, Stripes, and a Rap
THE OLD COUPLE (musical)
version by JULIAN BELL
Mon-Sat 7.45 and Sat 8.30

WILSON THEATRE
0171 369 8222 (day) 1145 (day)
National Youth Theatre presents
ROMEO & JULIET
Sat 8.30 (day) 11.15, 11.17

CAMBRIDGE 484 5000/416 0000
344 4444/420 0000 (+ day) 1145
Groups 484 5454
416 0200/416 0200/416 0200

GERARD
NOW IN ITS
5TH FANTASTIC YEAR
Sharing LUKO GOSS
"A Masterpiece" D. Exp
Mon-Sat 7.30pm Wed & Sat 8.30pm
ORANGE NOW INTO 1998

COMEDY 0171 369 1231
Sat 8.30 Mon-Sat 8.30 Sat 8.30
"FULL OF SURPRISE"
We are best quality 416 8008
and the end" S. Tel
PAUL NICHOLAS
SUSAN PERMALOV
"A beautiful performance" D. Exp
"A beautiful performance" D. Exp
THE MYSTERIOUS MR. LOVE
"A powerful, dramatic, powerful... a masterpiece of modern music" S. Tel
FULLY AIR CONDITIONED THEATRE
Mon-Sat 8.00pm
Mon-Sat 8.00pm

REDUCED SHAKESPEARE COMPANY

ALL 57 PLAYS IN 97 MINUTES

0171 369 1747

TO ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES THEATRE LISTINGS PLEASE CALL OUR ENTERTAINMENTS TEAM ON 0171 680 6222 OR FAX 0171 481 9313.

DEIRY LANE THEATRE ROYAL
55 0171 481 4814 (day) 1145
0171 481 4814 (day) 1145
0171 481 4814 (day) 1145

MISS SAISON
"THE CLASSIC LOVE STORY OF OUR TIME"
"A beautiful performance" D. Exp
Mon-Sat 7.30pm Wed & Sat 8.30pm
ORANGE NOW INTO 1998

COMEDY 0171 369 1231
Sat 8.30 Mon-Sat 8.30 Sat 8.30
"FULL OF SURPRISE"
We are best quality 416 8008
and the end" S. Tel
PAUL NICHOLAS
SUSAN PERMALOV
"A beautiful performance" D. Exp
"A beautiful performance" D. Exp
THE MYSTERIOUS MR. LOVE
"A powerful, dramatic, powerful... a masterpiece of modern music" S. Tel
FULLY AIR CONDITIONED THEATRE
Mon-Sat 8.00pm
Mon-Sat 8.00pm

REDUCED SHAKESPEARE COMPANY

ALL 57 PLAYS IN 97 MINUTES

0171 369 1747

TO ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES THEATRE LISTINGS PLEASE CALL OUR ENTERTAINMENTS TEAM ON 0171 680 6222 OR FAX 0171 481 9313.

GARRICK 0171 484 5000/416 0000
484 5000 (day) 1145
0171 484 5000 (day) 1145
0171 484 5000 (day) 1145

MISS SAISON
"THE CLASSIC LOVE STORY OF OUR TIME"
"A beautiful performance" D. Exp
Mon-Sat 7.30pm Wed & Sat 8.30pm
ORANGE NOW INTO 1998

COMEDY 0171 369 1231
Sat 8.30 Mon-Sat 8.30 Sat 8.30
"FULL OF SURPRISE"
We are best quality 416 8008
and the end" S. Tel
PAUL NICHOLAS
SUSAN PERMALOV
"A beautiful performance" D. Exp
"A beautiful performance" D. Exp
THE MYSTERIOUS MR. LOVE
"A powerful, dramatic, powerful... a masterpiece of modern music" S. Tel
FULLY AIR CONDITIONED THEATRE
Mon-Sat 8.00pm
Mon-Sat 8.00pm

REDUCED SHAKESPEARE COMPANY

ALL 57 PLAYS IN 97 MINUTES

0171 369 1747

TO ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES THEATRE LISTINGS PLEASE CALL OUR ENTERTAINMENTS TEAM ON 0171 680 6222 OR FAX 0171 481 9313.

LONDON PALLADIUM BOYC
0171 484 5000/416 0000
484 5000 (day) 1145
0171 484 5000 (day) 1145
0171 484 5000 (day) 1145

MISS SAISON
"THE CLASSIC LOVE STORY OF OUR TIME"
"A beautiful performance" D. Exp
Mon-Sat 7.30pm Wed & Sat 8.30pm
ORANGE NOW INTO 1998

COMEDY 0171 369 1231
Sat 8.30 Mon-Sat 8.30 Sat 8.30
"FULL OF SURPRISE"
We are best quality 416 8008
and the end" S. Tel
PAUL NICHOLAS
SUSAN PERMALOV
"A beautiful performance" D. Exp
"A beautiful performance" D. Exp
THE MYSTERIOUS MR. LOVE
"A powerful, dramatic, powerful... a masterpiece of modern music" S. Tel
FULLY AIR CONDITIONED THEATRE
Mon-Sat 8.00pm
Mon-Sat 8.00pm

REDUCED SHAKESPEARE COMPANY

ALL 57 PLAYS IN 97 MINUTES

0171 369 1747

TO ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES THEATRE LISTINGS PLEASE CALL OUR ENTERTAINMENTS TEAM ON 0171 680 6222 OR FAX 0171 481 9313.

NEW LONDON Day Line WCL
0171 484 5000/416 0000
484 5000 (day) 1145
0171 484 5000 (day) 1145
0171 484 5000 (day) 1145

MISS SAISON
"THE CLASSIC LOVE STORY OF OUR TIME"
"A beautiful performance" D. Exp
Mon-Sat 7.30pm Wed & Sat 8.30pm
ORANGE NOW INTO 1998

COMEDY 0171 369 1231
Sat 8.30 Mon-Sat 8.30 Sat 8.30
"FULL OF SURPRISE"
We are best quality 416 8008
and the end" S. Tel
PAUL NICHOLAS
SUSAN PERMALOV
"A beautiful performance" D. Exp
"A beautiful performance" D. Exp
THE MYSTERIOUS MR. LOVE
"A powerful, dramatic, powerful... a masterpiece of modern music" S. Tel
FULLY AIR CONDITIONED THEATRE
Mon-Sat 8.00pm
Mon-Sat 8.00pm

REDUCED SHAKESPEARE COMPANY

ALL 57 PLAYS IN 97 MINUTES

0171 369 1747

TO ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES THEATRE LISTINGS PLEASE CALL OUR ENTERTAINMENTS TEAM ON 0171 680 6222 OR FAX 0171 481 9313.

PHOENIX BOYC 0171 369 1231
369 1231 (day) 1145
0171 369 1231 (day) 1145
0171 369 1231 (day) 1145

MISS SAISON
"THE CLASSIC LOVE STORY OF OUR TIME"
"A beautiful performance" D. Exp
Mon-Sat 7.30pm Wed & Sat 8.30pm
ORANGE NOW INTO 1998

COMEDY 0171 369 1231
Sat 8.30 Mon-Sat 8.30 Sat 8.30
"FULL OF SURPRISE"
We are best quality 416 8008
and the end" S. Tel
PAUL NICHOLAS
SUSAN PERMALOV
"A beautiful performance" D. Exp
"A beautiful performance" D. Exp
THE MYSTERIOUS MR. LOVE
"A powerful, dramatic, powerful... a masterpiece of modern music" S. Tel
FULLY AIR CONDITIONED THEATRE
Mon-Sat 8.00pm
Mon-Sat 8.00pm

REDUCED SHAKESPEARE COMPANY

ALL 57 PLAYS IN 97 MINUTES

0171 369 1747

TO ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES THEATRE LISTINGS PLEASE CALL OUR ENTERTAINMENTS TEAM ON 0171 680 6222 OR FAX 0171 481 9313.

QUEENS 0171 484 5000/416 0000
484 5000 (day) 1145
0171 484 5000 (day) 1145
0171 484 5000 (day) 1145

MISS SAISON
"THE CLASSIC LOVE STORY OF OUR TIME"
"A beautiful performance" D. Exp
Mon-Sat 7.30pm Wed & Sat 8.30pm
ORANGE NOW INTO 1998

COMEDY 0171 369 1231
Sat 8.30 Mon-Sat 8.30 Sat 8.30
"FULL OF SURPRISE"
We are best quality 416 8008
and the end" S. Tel
PAUL NICHOLAS
SUSAN PERMALOV
"A beautiful performance" D. Exp
"A beautiful performance" D. Exp
THE MYSTERIOUS MR. LOVE
"A powerful, dramatic, powerful... a masterpiece of modern music" S. Tel
FULLY AIR CONDITIONED THEATRE
Mon-Sat 8.00pm
Mon-Sat 8.00pm

REDUCED SHAKESPEARE COMPANY

ALL 57 PLAYS IN 97 MINUTES

0171 369 1747

TO ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES THEATRE LISTINGS PLEASE CALL OUR ENTERTAINMENTS TEAM ON 0171 680 6222 OR FAX 0171 481 9313.

STRAND THEATRE Box Office & 0171 484 5000/416 0000
484 5000 (day) 1145
0171 484 5000 (day) 1145
0171 484 5000 (day) 1145

MISS SAISON
"THE CLASSIC LOVE STORY OF OUR TIME"
"A beautiful performance" D. Exp
Mon-Sat 7.30pm Wed & Sat 8.30pm
ORANGE NOW INTO 1998

COMEDY 0171 369 1231
Sat 8.30 Mon-Sat 8.30 Sat 8.30
"FULL OF SURPRISE"
We are best quality 416 8008
and the end" S. Tel
PAUL NICHOLAS
SUSAN PERMALOV
"A beautiful performance" D. Exp
"A beautiful performance" D. Exp
THE MYSTERIOUS MR. LOVE
"A powerful, dramatic, powerful... a masterpiece of modern music" S. Tel
FULLY AIR CONDITIONED THEATRE
Mon-Sat 8.00pm
Mon-Sat 8.00pm

REDUCED SHAKESPEARE COMPANY

ALL 57 PLAYS IN 97 MINUTES

0171 369 1747

TO ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES THEATRE LISTINGS PLEASE CALL OUR ENTERTAINMENTS TEAM ON 0171 680 6222 OR FAX 0171 481 9313.

ST MARTIN'S 0171 638 1865/0200
2020/0200 2020/0200 0200 0200
(day) 1145 Gips 0171 416 8008/0171
312 1897/0200 014005
London's best value in live music
DISCO'S

STANLEY EXPRESS
THE PLAYERS
White House Lane 18.45 day
Tue & Sat 8pm Tickets from £12.50

ARTS WCL 0171 838 3444
National Youth Theatre presents
Two Men, Stripes, and a Rap
THE OLD COUPLE (musical)
version by JULIAN BELL
Mon-Sat 7.45 and Sat 8.30

WILSON THEATRE
0171 369 8222 (day) 1145 (day)
National Youth Theatre presents
ROMEO & JULIET
Sat 8.30 (day) 11.15, 11.17

REDUCED SHAKESPEARE COMPANY

ALL 57 PLAYS IN 97 MINUTES

0171 369 1747

TO ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES THEATRE LISTINGS PLEASE CALL OUR ENTERTAINMENTS TEAM ON 0171 680 6222 OR FAX 0171 481 9313.

298,000 readers of this section go to the theatre at least once every 2/3 months.

To advertise in The Times theatre listings please call our sales team on 0171 680 6222 or fax 0171 481 9313.

All major credit cards accepted

Choose your team and win £50,000

Code	Name	Team	Price (£m)
10101	Jim Leighton	Aberdeen	2.0
10201	David Seaman	Arsenal	5.0
10301	Mark Bosnich	Aston Villa	3.0
10401	David Watson	Barnsley	1.0
10501	Tim Flowers	Blackburn Rovers	3.5
10601	Keith Brannagan	Bolton Wanderers	1.5
10701	Stewart Kerr	Cardiff	4.0
10801	Ted de Gooijer	Coventry City	1.5
10901	Steve Ogilvie	Crystal Palace	1.0
11001	Carlo Nash	Derby County	2.0
11101	Kevin Miller	Doncaster Rovers	1.5
11201	Matt Poon	Durham	1.5
11301	Seb O'Sullivan	Durham	1.0
11401	Ian Westwater	Durham	1.0
11501	Neil Southall	Everton	2.0
11601	Chris Boyd	Gloucester	1.5
11701	Dragoje Lekovic	Gloucester	1.0
11801	Miguel Muny	Leeds United	3.5
11901	Steve Walker	Leeds United	1.5
12001	David James	Leeds United	2.0
12101	Peter Schmeichel	Manchester United	5.0
12201	Scott Hoggie	Manchester United	1.0
12301	Shay Givens	Manchester United	1.0
12401	Andy Goran	Manchester United	1.0
12501	Kevin Pressman	Sheffield Wednesday	2.5
12601	Alan Mann	St Johnstone	0.5
12701	Mark Tait	Southampton	1.5
12801	Ian Walker	Tottenham Hotspur	2.0
12901	Lukic Miodrag	West Ham United	3.0
13001	Neil Sullivan	Wimbledon	2.5

Code	Name	Team	Price (£m)
20201	Lee Dixon	Arsenal	3.0
20301	Nigel Winterburn	Arsenal	3.0
20401	Simon Givens	Aston Villa	2.5
20501	Alan Wright	Aston Villa	2.0
20601	Simon Givens	Aston Villa	2.0
20701	Fernando Nelson	Aston Villa	2.0
20801	Nicky Eaden	Barnsley	0.5
20901	Neil Thompson	Barnsley	0.5
21001	Jeff Kenna	Blackburn Rovers	1.0
21101	Patrick Valley	Blackburn Rovers	1.0
21201	Neil Carr	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
21301	Nickie Elliott	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
21401	Tommy Boyd	Cardiff	3.5
21501	Tommy Boyd	Cardiff	3.5
21601	Jackie McNamara	Cardiff	3.5
21701	Grasme La Saur	Cardiff	3.5
21801	Dan Petrescu	Cardiff	3.5
21901	Celestine Babayaro	Cardiff	3.5
22001	David Burrows	Cardiff	3.5
22101	Brian Burrows	Cardiff	3.5
22201	Marcus Hill	Cardiff	3.5
22301	Dean Gordon	Cardiff	3.5
22401	Marc Edwards	Cardiff	3.5
22501	Kevin Muscat	Cardiff	3.5
22601	Chris Powell	Cardiff	3.5
22701	Dean Yates	Cardiff	3.5
22801	Andy Hinchcliffe	Cardiff	3.5
22901	Sam Bennett	Cardiff	3.5
23001	Terry Phelan	Cardiff	3.5
23101	Gary Locke	Cardiff	3.5
23201	Dylan Kerr	Cardiff	3.5
23301	Gary Kelly	Cardiff	3.5
23401	David Robertson	Cardiff	3.5
23501	Mike Whelan	Cardiff	3.5
23601	Steve Gurney	Cardiff	3.5
23701	Slig Inge Stormey	Cardiff	3.5
23801	Jason McAuley	Cardiff	3.5
23901	Dennis Irwin	Cardiff	3.5
24001	Gary McAuley	Cardiff	3.5
24101	Phil Neville	Cardiff	3.5
24201	Steve Watson	Cardiff	3.5
24301	Warren Bates	Cardiff	3.5
24401	John Bannister	Cardiff	3.5
24501	Stuart Pearce	Cardiff	3.5
24601	Alex Coad	Cardiff	3.5
24701	Stefan Stancu	Cardiff	3.5
24801	Patrick Blondeau	Cardiff	3.5
24901	Ian Nolan	Cardiff	3.5
25001	Simon Dadd	Cardiff	3.5
25101	Francis Burrell	Cardiff	3.5
25201	Stuart Charlton	Cardiff	3.5
25301	Clive Wilson	Cardiff	3.5
25401	Justin Sallagher	Cardiff	3.5
25501	John Dickie	Cardiff	3.5
25601	Andy Impy	Cardiff	3.5
25701	Ben Trinder	Cardiff	3.5
25801	Kenny Cunningham	Cardiff	3.5
25901	Alan Kimble	Cardiff	3.5

Code	Name	Team	Price (£m)
30101	Brian O'Neill	Aberdeen	2.0
30201	Tony Adams	Arsenal	2.5
30301	Martin Brown	Arsenal	2.5
30401	Giles Grimandi	Arsenal	2.5
30501	Gavin Hastings	Aston Villa	2.5
30601	Ugo Ehiogu	Aston Villa	2.5
30701	Arjen de Zeeuw	Barnsley	0.5
30801	Arjen de Zeeuw	Barnsley	0.5
30901	Matty Appleby	Barnsley	0.5
31001	Colin Hendry	Blackburn Rovers	1.5
31101	Stephane Henchoz	Blackburn Rovers	1.5
31201	Garry Tappin	Bolton Wanderers	1.5
31301	Glenn Whelan	Bolton Wanderers	1.5
31401	Chris Tappin	Bolton Wanderers	1.5
31501	Enrico Anselmi	Cardiff	3.0
31601	Matty Appleby	Cardiff	3.0
31701	Alan Stubbs	Cardiff	3.0
31801	Frank Leboeuf	Cardiff	3.0
31901	Michael Duberry	Cardiff	3.0
32001	Steve Clark	Cardiff	3.0
32101	Bernard Lambourne	Cardiff	3.0
32201	Liam Deish	Cardiff	3.0
32301	Richard Shaw	Cardiff	3.0
32401	Andy Roberts	Cardiff	3.0
32501	Andy Lunn	Cardiff	3.0
32601	Mark Wright	Cardiff	3.0
32701	Igor Strincic	Cardiff	3.0
32801	Jason Lunn	Cardiff	3.0
32901	Steven Pringle	Cardiff	3.0
33001	Greg Shields	Cardiff	3.0
33101	Steven Elie	Cardiff	3.0
33201	David Wilson	Cardiff	3.0
33301	David West	Cardiff	3.0
33401	John Hughes	Cardiff	3.0
33501	David Whelan	Cardiff	3.0
33601	Gavin Harte	Cardiff	3.0
33701	Robert Mckenzie	Cardiff	3.0
33801	Lucas Radebe	Cardiff	3.0
33901	Mark Ebbett	Cardiff	3.0
34001	Pontus Kvarnstrom	Cardiff	3.0
34101	Steve Walsh	Cardiff	3.0
34201	Mark Wright	Cardiff	3.0
34301	Dominic Matteo	Cardiff	3.0
34401	Berni Kvarnstrom	Cardiff	3.0
34501	David Wilson	Cardiff	3.0
34601	Herman Berg	Cardiff	3.0
34701	Philippe Albert	Cardiff	3.0
34801	Darren Peacock	Cardiff	3.0
34901	Nicky Butt	Cardiff	3.0
35001	Alexander Paterson	Cardiff	3.0
35101	Berni Kvarnstrom	Cardiff	3.0
35201	David Wilson	Cardiff	3.0
35301	John Hughes	Cardiff	3.0
35401	David Whelan	Cardiff	3.0
35501	Gavin Harte	Cardiff	3.0
35601	Robert Mckenzie	Cardiff	3.0
35701	Lucas Radebe	Cardiff	3.0
35801	Mark Ebbett	Cardiff	3.0
35901	Pontus Kvarnstrom	Cardiff	3.0
36001	Steve Walsh	Cardiff	3.0
36101	Mark Wright	Cardiff	3.0
36201	Dominic Matteo	Cardiff	3.0
36301	Berni Kvarnstrom	Cardiff	3.0
36401	David Wilson	Cardiff	3.0
36501	Herman Berg	Cardiff	3.0
36601	Philippe Albert	Cardiff	3.0
36701	Darren Peacock	Cardiff	3.0
36801	Nicky Butt	Cardiff	3.0
36901	Alexander Paterson	Cardiff	3.0
37001	Berni Kvarnstrom	Cardiff	3.0
37101	David Wilson	Cardiff	3.0
37201	John Hughes	Cardiff	3.0
37301	David Whelan	Cardiff	3.0
37401	Gavin Harte	Cardiff	3.0
37501	Robert Mckenzie	Cardiff	3.0
37601	Lucas Radebe	Cardiff	3.0
37701	Mark Ebbett	Cardiff	3.0
37801	Pontus Kvarnstrom	Cardiff	3.0
37901	Steve Walsh	Cardiff	3.0
38001	Mark Wright	Cardiff	3.0
38101	Dominic Matteo	Cardiff	3.0
38201	Berni Kvarnstrom	Cardiff	3.0
38301	David Wilson	Cardiff	3.0
38401	Herman Berg	Cardiff	3.0
38501	Philippe Albert	Cardiff	3.0
38601	Darren Peacock	Cardiff	3.0
38701	Nicky Butt	Cardiff	3.0
38801	Alexander Paterson	Cardiff	3.0
38901	Berni Kvarnstrom	Cardiff	3.0
39001	David Wilson	Cardiff	3.0
39101	John Hughes	Cardiff	3.0
39201	David Whelan	Cardiff	3.0
39301	Gavin Harte	Cardiff	3.0
39401	Robert Mckenzie	Cardiff	3.0
39501	Lucas Radebe	Cardiff	3.0
39601	Mark Ebbett	Cardiff	3.0
39701	Pontus Kvarnstrom	Cardiff	3.0
39801	Steve Walsh	Cardiff	3.0
39901	Mark Wright	Cardiff	3.0

Code	Name	Team	Price (£m)
40101	Scott Sellers	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
40201	Paul Farnham	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
40301	Michael Johnson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
40401	James Pollock	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
40501	Archie Thomson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
40601	Phil O'Donnell	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
40701	Colin Burley	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
40801	Ravi Bhatia	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
40901	David Wilson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
41001	Roberto di Matteo	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
41101	Eddie Newton	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
41201	Gustavo Poyet	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
41301	Bary McAllister	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
41401	Tomasz Jendryaszek	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
41501	John Salako	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
41601	Simon Rodger	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
41701	Darren Fletcher	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
41801	Paul Warhurst	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
41901	Adrian Lumbard	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
42001	Alonso Alcaraz	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
42101	Stefano Eranio	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
42201	Danny Powell	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
42301	Chadwell Dooly	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
42401	Robert van der Laan	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
42501	Jonathan Hunt	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
42601	Robbie Williams	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
42701	Andy Smith	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
42801	Darrell Flaming	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
42901	Gary Speed	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
43001	Jon Parkinson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
43101	David Wilson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
43201	Garth Farry	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
43301	Danny Williams	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
43401	Neil MacFarlane	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
43501	Chris Jackson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
43601	Barry Lavery	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
43701	John Hughes	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
43801	David Whelan	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
43901	David Wilson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
44001	David Wilson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
44101	David Wilson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
44201	David Wilson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
44301	David Wilson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
44401	David Wilson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
44501	David Wilson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
44601	David Wilson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
44701	David Wilson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
44801	David Wilson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
44901	David Wilson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
45001	David Wilson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0

Code	Name	Team	Price (£m)
40101	Scott Sellers	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
40201	Paul Farnham	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
40301	Michael Johnson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
40401	James Pollock	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
40501	Archie Thomson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
40601	Phil O'Donnell	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
40701	Colin Burley	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
40801	Ravi Bhatia	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
40901	David Wilson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
41001	Roberto di Matteo	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
41101	Eddie Newton	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
41201	Gustavo Poyet	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
41301	Bary McAllister	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
41401	Tomasz Jendryaszek	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
41501	John Salako	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
41601	Simon Rodger	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
41701	Darren Fletcher	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
41801	Paul Warhurst	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
41901	Adrian Lumbard	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
42001	Alonso Alcaraz	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
42101	Stefano Eranio	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
42201	Danny Powell	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
42301	Chadwell Dooly	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
42401	Robert van der Laan	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
42501	Jonathan Hunt	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
42601	Robbie Williams	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
42701	Andy Smith	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
42801	Darrell Flaming	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
42901	Gary Speed	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
43001	Jon Parkinson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
43101	David Wilson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
43201	Garth Farry	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
43301	Danny Williams	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
43401	Neil MacFarlane	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
43501	Chris Jackson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
43601	Barry Lavery	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
43701	John Hughes	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
43801	David Whelan	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
43901	David Wilson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
44001	David Wilson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
44101	David Wilson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
44201	David Wilson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
44301	David Wilson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
44401	David Wilson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
44501	David Wilson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
44601	David Wilson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
44701	David Wilson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
44801	David Wilson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
44901	David Wilson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
45001	David Wilson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0

WIMBORNE
Code	Name	Team	Price (£m)
40902	Scott Sellers	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
40903	Per Frandsen	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
40904	Michael Johnson	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
40905	James Potts	Bolton Wanderers	2.0
40701	Andrew Thom	Celtic	4.5
40702	Phil O'Donnell	Celtic	3.0
40704	Craig Barrie	Celtic	3.0
42503	Rory Black	Celtic	3.0
42601	Heberto Wise	Chelsea	2.0
42602	Roberto di Matteo	Chelsea	2.5
42603	Eddie Newton	Chelsea	2.5
42604	Gustavo Poyel	Chelsea	2.5
43001	Gary McKean	Coventry City	1.5
43002	Torond Egei Solvsted	Coventry City	1.5
43003	John Salako	Coventry City	1.0
43004	Sirhan Rodger	Crystal Palace	0.25
43005	Darren Fletcher	Crystal Palace	1.5
43006	Paul Warhurst	Crystal Palace	1.5
43005	Alistair Lambie	Crystal Palace	2.5
43101	Alexia Jesmanovic	Derby County	2.5
43102	Stefano Enrie	Derby County	1.5
43103	Darrell Powell	Derby County	1.0
43104	Christian Dally	Derby County	1.0
43105	Robin van de Laan	Derby County	1.0
43106	Jeromeau Hunt	Derby County	1.0
43201	Robbie Mason	Dundee United	1.0
43301	Andy Smith	Dunfermline	1.0
43302	Dennis Fleming	Dunfermline	1.0
43401	Gary Simpson	Everton	3.0
43402	Joe Parkinson	Everton	2.0
43403	Gareth Farrelly	Everton	2.0
43404	Danny Williamson	Everton	2.0
43405	Ned MacGillivray	Hearts	2.0

Richard Evans on a study unstinting in its praise of crowd behaviour

Natives friendly in racecourse jungle

When Kate Fox, an anthropologist and director of the Social Issues Research Centre at Oxford, went racing for the first time in 1995 she could not believe how racegoers behaved — and turned the beliefs of social scientists on their head.

"Racegoers were not conforming to the laws of crowd behaviour. They were making eye contact and smiling at each other and striking up conversations with strangers, which normally just does not happen. Normally in a crowd people avoid making eye contact, whereas racegoers are behaving like a small, friendly tribe," she said.

RICHARD EVANS

Nap: SPARKY (3.45 Hamilton Park)
Next best: Generosity (3.15 Hamilton Park)

Fascinated by what she had witnessed, Fox, 35, left Ascot determined to investigate further. After a year's research, which involved visiting 22 race meetings and conducting countless interviews, she has produced a revealing Desmond Morris-style report: The Racing Tribe: The Social Behaviour of Horsewatchers, which is published today.

The study, funded by the Tote and the BHB, found the world of horseracing to be a village-like, tribal society. Contrary to public assumptions, the research showed racecourses are not dominated by "tobs", and the sport has more right than football to be called the national sport as it appeals to all social classes, all ages and a much higher percentage of women. "You are more likely to find a representative sample of the British population at a race meeting than at any other spectator sport," she says.

Kate Fox researches the attitudes of racegoers for her report The Racing Tribe. Photograph: Jon Franklin

Looking at the behaviour of racegoers, Fox found that racing crowds do not behave like people in other settings. "The racing tribe proved to be the kind of friendly, obliging natives that most anthropologists encounter only in their dreams. As soon as they pass through the gates, the behav-our of racegoers is influenced by a set of unwritten but tacitly understood laws and customs which promote significant changes in their comportment and interactions."

For example, at the races hordes of young men congregate, are known to have a drink and gamble in an exciting atmosphere with plenty of opportunities for aggression. Yet there is no violence or vandalism.

Racing was also found to be a bastion of civility. Female racegoers indulge in highly exhibitionist dressing, yet are invariably treated as "ladies", with courtesy and respect. The "ultimate demonstration" of the good humour and goodwill of the racing tribe came during the bomb alert which led to the postponement of this year's Grand National.

"Despite great confusion and contradictory instructions from security personnel and police loudspeakers, 60,000 people were safely evacuated from the racecourse without any pushing, shoving or even cross words," the report adds. The reasons for racegoers' sociability and good behaviour are varied. Unlike any other spectator sport, the "action" takes place in a few minutes, interspersed with half-hour intervals which allow more opportunities for "social interaction".

Racing also offers an escape from the restrictions of ordinary life. Another key factor is the "bonding" effect of risk-taking. Everyone at the races is in-involved in some degree of risk taking, from the jockeys who risk life and limb to the social racegoer with a £2 bet.

Although racing crowds can be divided into distinctive types and groups, they cut across normal socio-economic boundaries. Fox identified two main categories of racegoers: The Enthusiasts — including what she terms fans, addicts, horseys and anoraks — and Socials — including suits, girls and lads' day-outers, pair-bonders, family day outers and be-seers.

The report also defines other key members of racing's tribe. The social position of jockeys is likened to that of tribal warriors: trainers apparently have the prestige and mystery of witch-doctors; stewards and officials are like tribal elders; bookmakers perform a scapegoat function, while racing journalists are the scribes and oracles of the racing tribe.

Fox also touches on the unwritten rules which govern racegoers' etiquette — including betting, where £2 "is a ladies' bet and anything below a five casts doubt on the masculinity of the male punter". Fox admits her report may be regarded by some as painting too rosy a picture of racegoers. "In defence, I can only say that while the puritanical or envious may find much to condemn the world of racing, observers of human behaviour cannot fail to be intrigued by this culture — and that, being human, most observers will be affected by the sunny social micro-climate of the racecourse."

The Racing Tribe — The Social Behaviour of Horsewatchers by Kate Fox (The Social Issues Research Centre, 28 St Clements St., Oxford OX4 1AB)

Another Fantasy strikes

ANOTHER FANTASY gave Richard Hannon his second success in the Tattersall's Breeders' Stakes when beating Law Library at the Curragh on Saturday. Hannon also saddled the third, Daunting Lady.

Law Library led the stands' side group from halfway, but Dane O'Neill, riding his first winner in Ireland, held the upper hand as Another Fantasy drew clear on the far rail. O'Neill said: "I got a lead from Jacmar, then I looked over when I drove. Another Fantasy to the front of our group two out and saw that I was at least up there. Law Library, I was in front just after a furlong out and it was late in the day before the runner-up began to hit back."

Daunting Lady, with Michael Kinane aboard, was supposed to be the better of the Hannon pair, but she sweated

CURRAGH DETAILS

Going: good to soft
3.55 TATTERSALL'S BREEDERS' STAKES (2-Y-O; £14,500; 6f)
1. ANOTHER FANTASY (Dane O'Neill, 15-1), 2. Law Library (R J Manning, 7-1), 3. Daunting Lady (M J Kinane, 13-2) ALSO RAN: 5. Bella Sola (Bry), 7. Concorde (Bry), 12. Best Friend (Gardner), 20. Challenger Two (Dermot), 21. Delfino (Tarrant), 22. Gold Redoubt (Honey), 23. Marlin, 33. Black Rock City (Lilly), 34. Moonstone, 35. Black Prince (Gardner), 36. Galt, 37. Kite Lane, 38. Whirlwind (Lilly), 39. Black Prince, 28. Mr. N. Carruthers, 29. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 30. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 31. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 32. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 33. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 34. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 35. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 36. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 37. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 38. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 39. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 40. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 41. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 42. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 43. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 44. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 45. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 46. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 47. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 48. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 49. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 50. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 51. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 52. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 53. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 54. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 55. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 56. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 57. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 58. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 59. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 60. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 61. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 62. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 63. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 64. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 65. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 66. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 67. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 68. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 69. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 70. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 71. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 72. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 73. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 74. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 75. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 76. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 77. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 78. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 79. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 80. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 81. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 82. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 83. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 84. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 85. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 86. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 87. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 88. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 89. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 90. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 91. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 92. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 93. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 94. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 95. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 96. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 97. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 98. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 99. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 100. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 101. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 102. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 103. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 104. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 105. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 106. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 107. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 108. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 109. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 110. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 111. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 112. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 113. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 114. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 115. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 116. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 117. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 118. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 119. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 120. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 121. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 122. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 123. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 124. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 125. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 126. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 127. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 128. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 129. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 130. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 131. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 132. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 133. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 134. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 135. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 136. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 137. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 138. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 139. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 140. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 141. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 142. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 143. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 144. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 145. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 146. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 147. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 148. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 149. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 150. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 151. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 152. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 153. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 154. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 155. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 156. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 157. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 158. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 159. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 160. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 161. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 162. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 163. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 164. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 165. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 166. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 167. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 168. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 169. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 170. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 171. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 172. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 173. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 174. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 175. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 176. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 177. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 178. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 179. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 180. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 181. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 182. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 183. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 184. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 185. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 186. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 187. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 188. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 189. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 190. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 191. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 192. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 193. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 194. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 195. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 196. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 197. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 198. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 199. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 200. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 201. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 202. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 203. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 204. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 205. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 206. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 207. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 208. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 209. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 210. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 211. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 212. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 213. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 214. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 215. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 216. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 217. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 218. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 219. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 220. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 221. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 222. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 223. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 224. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 225. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 226. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 227. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 228. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 229. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 230. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 231. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 232. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 233. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 234. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 235. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 236. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 237. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 238. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 239. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 240. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 241. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 242. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 243. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 244. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 245. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 246. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 247. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 248. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 249. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 250. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 251. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 252. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 253. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 254. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 255. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 256. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 257. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 258. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 259. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 260. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 261. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 262. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 263. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 264. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 265. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 266. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 267. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 268. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 269. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 270. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 271. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 272. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 273. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 274. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 275. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 276. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 277. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 278. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 279. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 280. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 281. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 282. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 283. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 284. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 285. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 286. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 287. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 288. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 289. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 290. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 291. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 292. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 293. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 294. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 295. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 296. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 297. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 298. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 299. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 300. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 301. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 302. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 303. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 304. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 305. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 306. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 307. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 308. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 309. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 310. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 311. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 312. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 313. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 314. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 315. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 316. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 317. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 318. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 319. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 320. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 321. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 322. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 323. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 324. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 325. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 326. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 327. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 328. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 329. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 330. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 331. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 332. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 333. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 334. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 335. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 336. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 337. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 338. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 339. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 340. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 341. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 342. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 343. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 344. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 345. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 346. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 347. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 348. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 349. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 350. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 351. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 352. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 353. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 354. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 355. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 356. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 357. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 358. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 359. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 360. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 361. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 362. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 363. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 364. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 365. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 366. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 367. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 368. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 369. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 370. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 371. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 372. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 373. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 374. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 375. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 376. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 377. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 378. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 379. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 380. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 381. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 382. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 383. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 384. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 385. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 386. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 387. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 388. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 389. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 390. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 391. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 392. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 393. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 394. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 395. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 396. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 397. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 398. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 399. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 400. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 401. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 402. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 403. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 404. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 405. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 406. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 407. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 408. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 409. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 410. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 411. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 412. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 413. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 414. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 415. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 416. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 417. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 418. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 419. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 420. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 421. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 422. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 423. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 424. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 425. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 426. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 427. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 428. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 429. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 430. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 431. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 432. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 433. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 434. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 435. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 436. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 437. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 438. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 439. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 440. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 441. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 442. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 443. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 444. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 445. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 446. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 447. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 448. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 449. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 450. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 451. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 452. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 453. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 454. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 455. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 456. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 457. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 458. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 459. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 460. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 461. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 462. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 463. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 464. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 465. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 466. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 467. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 468. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 469. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 470. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 471. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 472. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 473. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 474. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 475. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 476. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 477. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 478. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 479. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 480. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 481. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 482. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 483. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 484. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 485. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 486. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 487. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 488. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 489. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 490. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 491. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 492. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 493. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 494. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 495. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 496. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 497. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 498. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 499. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 500. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 501. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 502. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 503. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 504. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 505. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 506. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 507. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 508. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 509. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 510. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 511. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 512. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 513. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 514. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 515. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 516. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 517. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 518. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 519. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 520. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 521. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 522. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 523. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 524. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 525. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 526. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 527. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 528. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 529. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 530. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 531. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 532. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 533. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 534. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 535. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 536. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 537. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 538. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 539. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 540. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 541. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 542. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 543. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 544. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 545. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 546. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 547. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 548. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 549. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 550. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 551. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 552. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 553. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 554. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 555. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 556. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 557. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 558. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 559. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 560. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 561. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 562. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 563. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 564. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 565. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 566. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 567. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 568. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 569. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 570. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 571. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 572. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 573. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 574. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 575. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 576. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 577. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 578. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 579. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 580. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 581. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 582. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 583. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 584. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 585. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 586. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 587. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 588. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 589. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 590. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 591. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 592. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 593. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 594. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 595. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 596. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 597. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 598. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 599. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 600. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 601. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 602. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 603. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 604. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 605. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 606. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 607. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 608. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 609. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 610. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 611. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 612. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 613. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 614. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 615. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 616. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 617. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 618. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 619. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 620. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 621. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 622. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 623. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 624. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 625. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 626. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 627. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 628. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 629. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 630. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 631. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 632. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 633. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 634. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 635. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 636. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 637. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 638. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 639. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 640. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 641. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 642. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 643. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 644. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 645. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 646. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 647. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 648. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 649. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 650. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 651. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 652. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 653. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 654. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 655. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 656. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 657. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 658. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 659. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 660. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 661. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 662. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 663. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 664. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 665. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 666. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 667. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 668. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 669. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 670. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 671. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 672. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 673. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 674. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 675. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 676. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 677. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 678. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 679. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 680. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 681. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 682. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 683. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 684. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 685. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 686. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 687. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 688. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 689. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 690. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 691. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 692. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 693. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 694. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 695. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 696. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 697. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 698. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 699. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 700. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 701. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 702. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 703. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 704. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 705. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 706. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 707. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 708. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 709. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 710. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 711. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 712. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 713. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 714. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 715. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 716. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 717. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 718. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 719. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 720. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 721. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 722. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 723. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 724. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 725. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 726. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 727. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 728. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 729. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 730. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 731. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 732. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 733. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 734. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 735. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 736. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 737. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 738. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 739. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 740. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 741. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 742. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 743. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 744. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 745. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 746. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 747. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 748. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 749. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 750. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 751. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 752. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 753. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 754. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 755. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 756. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 757. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 758. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 759. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 760. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 761. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 762. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 763. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 764. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 765. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 766. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 767. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 768. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 769. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 770. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 771. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 772. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 773. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 774. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 775. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 776. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 777. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 778. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 779. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 780. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 781. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 782. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 783. Hannon at Enniscorthy, 784. H

ATHLETICS

Track and field
BEFORE: British Athletics League. Men's Gold Cup, Final: Womersley, 100m; 200m; 400m; 800m; 1,600m; 3,200m; 6,400m; 12,800m; 25,600m; 51,200m; 102,400m; 204,800m; 409,600m; 819,200m; 1,638,400m; 3,276,800m; 6,553,600m; 13,107,200m; 26,214,400m; 52,428,800m; 104,857,600m; 209,715,200m; 419,430,400m; 838,860,800m; 1,677,721,600m; 3,355,443,200m; 6,710,886,400m; 13,421,772,800m; 26,843,545,600m; 53,687,091,200m; 107,374,182,400m; 214,748,364,800m; 429,496,729,600m; 858,993,459,200m; 1,717,986,918,400m; 3,435,973,836,800m; 6,871,947,673,600m; 13,743,895,347,200m; 27,487,790,694,400m; 54,975,581,388,800m; 109,951,162,777,600m; 219,902,325,555,200m; 439,804,651,110,400m; 879,609,302,220,800m; 1,759,218,604,441,600m; 3,518,437,208,883,200m; 7,036,874,417,766,400m; 14,073,748,835,532,800m; 28,147,497,671,065,600m; 56,294,995,342,131,200m; 112,589,990,684,262,400m; 225,179,981,368,524,800m; 450,359,962,737,049,600m; 900,719,925,474,099,200m; 1,801,439,850,948,198,400m; 3,602,879,701,896,396,800m; 7,205,759,403,792,793,600m; 14,411,518,807,585,587,200m; 28,823,037,615,171,174,400m; 57,646,075,230,342,348,800m; 115,292,150,460,684,697,600m; 230,584,300,921,369,395,200m; 461,168,601,842,738,790,400m; 922,337,203,685,477,580,800m; 1,844,674,407,370,955,161,600m; 3,689,348,814,741,910,323,200m; 7,378,697,629,483,820,646,400m; 14,757,395,258,967,641,292,800m; 29,514,790,517,935,282,585,600m; 59,029,581,035,870,565,171,200m; 118,059,162,071,741,130,342,342,400m; 236,118,324,143,482,260,684,684,800m; 472,236,648,286,964,521,369,369,600m; 944,473,296,573,929,042,738,739,200m; 1,888,946,593,147,858,085,477,477,440,000m; 3,777,893,186,295,717,715,954,954,954,880,000m; 7,555,786,372,591,435,431,909,909,909,760,000m; 15,111,572,745,182,868,871,819,819,819,520,000m; 30,223,145,490,771,737,757,639,639,639,040,000m; 60,446,290,981,543,475,475,279,279,278,080,000m; 120,892,581,963,086,950,950,558,558,556,160,000m; 241,785,163,926,173,901,901,117,117,116,320,000m; 483,570,327,848,347,802,802,234,234,232,640,000m; 967,140,655,696,694,604,604,468,468,467,280,000m; 1,934,281,311,393,388,120,808,120,936,936,935,744,000m; 3,868,562,622,786,776,241,616,241,873,873,872,488,000m; 7,737,125,245,573,552,483,232,483,747,747,746,976,000m; 15,474,250,491,147,106,465,465,995,995,994,952,000m; 30,948,500,982,294,212,930,930,991,991,990,904,000m; 61,897,001,964,588,425,861,861,982,982,981,808,000m; 123,794,003,929,177,751,723,723,965,965,964,616,000m; 247,588,007,858,354,503,503,931,931,930,930,123,200,000m; 495,176,015,716,709,006,006,862,862,861,861,246,400,000m; 990,352,031,433,418,012,012,172,172,171,171,492,800,000m; 1,980,704,062,866,836,024,024,344,344,343,343,985,600,000m; 3,961,408,125,733,672,048,048,688,688,687,687,971,200,000m; 7,922,816,251,467,344,096,096,137,137,136,136,194,240,000m; 15,845,632,502,934,688,192,192,274,274,273,273,388,480,000m; 31,691,265,005,869,376,384,384,548,548,547,547,776,960,000m; 63,382,530,011,738,752,768,768,1,096,1,095,1,095,1,392,1,391,1,391,1,856,1,855,1,855,2,592,2,591,2,591,3,584,3,583,3,583,4,736,4,735,4,735,6,288,6,287,6,287,8,384,8,383,8,383,11,168,11,167,11,167,14,912,14,911,14,911,19,848,19,847,19,847,26,464,26,463,26,463,35,280,35,279,35,279,47,040,47,039,47,039,62,720,62,719,62,719,83,616,83,615,83,615,111,360,111,359,111,359,148,480,148,479,148,479,197,936,197,935,197,935,263,920,263,919,263,919,351,200,351,199,351,464,463,463,618,617,617,824,823,823,1,096,1,095,1,095,1,464,1,463,1,463,1,952,1,951,1,951,2,600,2,599,2,599,3,464,3,463,3,463,4,608,4,607,4,607,6,144,6,143,6,143,8,192,8,191,8,191,10,912,10,911,10,911,14,544,14,543,14,543,19,392,19,391,19,391,25,840,25,839,25,839,34,480,34,479,34,479,45,920,45,919,45,919,61,200,61,199,61,199,81,600,81,599,81,599,108,800,108,799,108,799,144,960,144,959,144,959,192,1,280,1,279,1,279,256,1,712,1,711,1,711,352,2,432,2,431,2,431,464,3,424,3,423,3,423,600,4,512,4,511,4,511,792,5,904,5,903,5,903,1,040,7,840,7,839,7,839,1,384,10,304,10,303,10,303,1,856,14,080,14,079,14,079,2,464,3,136,3,135,3,135,3,264,4,160,4,159,4,159,4,352,5,648,5,647,5,647,5,824,7,728,7,727,7,727,7,712,10,256,10,255,10,255,9,984,13,312,13,311,13,311,12,480,16,640,16,639,16,639,16,640,22,176,22,175,22,175,29,504,39,264,39,263,39,263,39,264,52,384,52,383,52,383,69,120,92,160,92,159,92,159,92,160,123,200,123,199,123,199,164,208,164,207,164,207,217,280,217,279,217,279,288,384,288,383,288,384,384,512,511,511,672,896,895,895,1,152,1,536,1,535,1,535,2,016,2,688,2,687,2,687,2,704,3,648,3,647,3,647,4,800,6,432,6,431,6,431,6,400,8,544,8,543,8,543,11,040,14,720,14,719,14,719,15,360,20,480,20,479,20,479,26,240,34,960,34,959,34,959,37,600,50,080,50,079,50,079,50,080,66,784,66,783,66,783,88,960,118,080,118,079,118,079,157,440,209,920,209,919,209,919,211,840,282,560,282,559,282,559,282,560,376,720,376,719,376,719,502,880,502,879,502,879,670,896,670,895,670,895,896,1,192,1,584,1,583,1,583,2,048,2,736,2,735,2,735,2,736,3,648,3,647,3,647,4,800,6,432,6,431,6,431,6,400,8,544,8,543,8,543,11,040,14,720,14,719,14,719,15,360,20,480,20,479,20,479,26,240,34,960,34,959,34,959,37,600,50,080,50,079,50,079,50,080,66,784,66,783,66,783,88,960,118,080,118,079,118,079,157,440,209,920,209,919,209,919,211,840,282,560,282,559,282,559,282,560,376,720,376,719,376,719,502,880,502,879,502,879,670,896,670,895,670,895,896,1,192,1,584,1,583,1,583,2,048,2,736,2,735,2,735,2,736,3,648,3,647,3,647,4,800,6,432,6,431,6,431,6,400,8,544,8,543,8,543,11,040,14,720,14,719,14,719,15,360,20,480,20,479,20,479,26,240,34,960,34,959,34,959,37,600,50,080,50,079,50,079,50,080,66,784,66,783,66,783,88,960,118,080,118,079,118,079,157,440,209,920,209,919,209,919,211,840,282,560,282,559,282,559,282,560,376,720,376,719,376,719,502,880,502,879,502,879,670,896,670,895,670,895,896,1,192,1,584,1,583,1,583,2,048,2,736,2,735,2,735,2,736,3,648,3,647,3,647,4,800,6,432,6,431,6,431,6,400,8,544,8,543,8,543,11,040,14,720,14,719,14,719,15,360,20,480,20,479,20,479,26,240,34,960,34,959,34,959,37,600,50,080,50,079,50,079,50,080,66,784,66,783,66,783,88,960,118,080,118,079,118,079,157,440,209,920,209,919,209,919,211,840,282,560,282,559,282,559,282,560,376,720,376,719,376,719,502,880,502,879,502,879,670,896,670,895,670,895,896,1,192,1,584,1,583,1,583,2,048,2,736,2,735,2,735,2,736,3,648,3,647,3,647,4,800,6,432,6,431,6,431,6,400,8,544,8,543,8,543,11,040,14,720,14,719,14,719,15,360,20,480,20,479,20,479,26,240,34,960,34,959,34,959,37,600,50,080,50,079,50,079,50,080,66,784,66,783,66,783,88,960,118,080,118,079,118,079,157,440,209,920,209,919,209,919,211,840,282,560,282,559,282,559,282,560,376,720,376,719,376,719,502,880,502,879,502,879,670,896,670,895,670,895,896,1,192,1,584,1,583,1,583,2,048,2,736,2,735,2,735,2,736,3,648,3,647,3,647,4,800,6,432,6,431,6,431,6,400,8,544,8,543,8,543,11,040,14,720,14,719,14,719,15,360,20,480,20,479,20,479,26,240,34,960,34,959,34,959,37,600,50,080,50,079,50,079,50,080,66,784,66,783,66,783,88,960,118,080,118,079,118,079,157,440,209,920,209,919,209,919,211,840,282,560,282,559,282,559,282,560,376,720,376,719,376,719,502,880,502,879,502,879,670,896,670,895,670,895,896,1,192,1,584,1,583,1,583,2,048,2,736,2,735,2,735,2,736,3,648,3,647,3,647,4,800,6,432,6,431,6,431,6,400,8,544,8,543,8,543,11,040,14,720,14,719,14,719,15,360,20,480,20,479,20,479,26,240,34,960,34,959,34,959,37,600,50,080,50,079,50,079,50,080,66,784,66,783,66,783,88,960,118,080,118,079,118,079,157,440,209,920,209,919,209,919,211,840,282,560,282,559,282,559,282,560,376,720,376,719,376,719,502,880,502,879,502,879,670,896,670,895,670,895,896,1,192,1,584,1,583,1,583,2,048,2,736,2,735,2,735,2,736,3,648,3,647,3,647,4,800,6,432,6,431,6,431,6,400,8,544,8,543,8,543,11,040,14,720,14,719,14,719,15,360,20,480,20,479,20,479,26,240,34,960,34,959,34,959,37,600,50,080,50,079,50,079,50,080,66,784,66,783,66,783,88,960,118,080,118,079,118,079,157,440,209,920,209,919,209,919,211,840,282,560,282,559,282,559,282,560,376,720,376,719,376,719,502,880,502,879,502,879,670,896,670,895,670,895,896,1,192,1,584,1,583,1,583,2,048,2,736,2,735,2,735,2,736,3,648,3,647,3,647,4,800,6,432,6,431,6,431,6,400,8,544,8,543,8,543,11,040,14,720,14,719,14,719,15,360,20,480,20,479,20,479,26,240,34,960,34,959,34,959,37,600,50,080,50,079,50,079,50,080,66,784,66,783,66,783,88,960,118,080,118,079,118,079,157,440,209,920,209,919,209,919,211,840,282,560,282,559,282,559,282,560,376,720,376,719,376,719,502,880,502,879,502,879,670,896,670,895,670,895,896,1,192,1,584,1,583,1,583,2,048,2,736,2,735,2,735,2,736,3,648,3,647,3,647,4,800,6,432,6,431,6,431,6,400,8,544,8,543,8,543,11,040,14,720,14,719,14,719,15,360,20,480,20,479,20,479,26,240,34,960,34,959,34,959,37,600,50,080,50,079,50,079,50,080,66,784,66,783,66,783,88,960,118,080,118,079,118,079,157,440,209,920,209,919,209,919,211,840,282,560,282,559,282,559,282,560,376,720,376,719,376,719,502,880,502,879,502,879,670,896,670,895,670,895,896,1,192,1,584,1,583,1,583,2,048,2,736,2,735,2,735,2,736,3,648,3,647,3,647,4,800,6,432,6,431,6,431,6,400,8,544,8,543,8,543,11,040,14,720,14,719,14,719,15,360,20,480,20,479,20,479,26,240,34,960,34,959,34,959,37,600,50,080,50,079,50,079,50,080,66,784,66,783,66,783,88,960,118,080,118,079,118,079,157,440,209,920,209,919,209,919,211,840,282,560,282,559,282,559,282,560,376,720,376,719,376,719,502,880,502,879,502,879,670,896,670,895,670,895,896,1,192,1,584,1,583,1,583,2,048,2,736,2,735,2,735,2,736,3,648,3,647,3,647,4,800,6,432,6,431,6,431,6,400,8,544,8,543,8,543,11,040,14,720,14,719,14,719,15,360,20,480,20,479,20,479,26,240,34,960,34,959,34,959,37,600,50,080,50,079,50,079,50,080,66,784,66,783,66,783,88,960,118,080,118,079,118,079,157,440,209,920,209,919,209,919,211,840,282,560,282,559,282,559,282,560,376,720,376,719,376,719,502,880,502,879,502,879,670,896,670,895,670,895,896,1,192,1,584,1,583,1,583,2,048,2,736,2,735,2,735,2,736,3,648,3,647,3,647,4,800,6,432,6,431,6,431,6,400,8,544,8,543,8,543,11,040,14,720,14,719,14,719,15,360,20,480,20,479,20,479,26,240,34,960,34,959,34,959,37,600,50,080,50,079,50,079,50,080,66,784,66,783,66,783,88,960,118,080,118,079,118,079,157,440,209,920,209,919,209,919,211,840,282,560,282,559,282,559,282,560,376,720,376,719,376,719,502,880,502,879,502,879,670,896,670,895,670,895,896,1,192,1,584,1,583,1,583,2,048,2,736,2,735,2,735,2,736,3,648,3,647,3,647,4,800,6,432,6,431,6,431,6,400,8,544,8,543,8,543,11,040,14,720,14,719,14,719,15,360,20,480,20,479,20,479,26,240,34,960,34,959,34,959,37,600,50,080,50,079,50,079,50,080,66,784,66,783,66,783,88,960,118,080,118,079,118,079,157,440,209,920,209,919,209,919,211,840,282,560,282,559,282,559,282,560,376,720,376,719,376,719,502,880,502,879,502,879,670,896,670,895,670,895,896,1,192,1,584,1,583,1,583,2,048,2,736,2,735,2,735,2,736,3,648,3,647,3,647,4,800,6,432,6,431,6,431,6,400,8,544,8,543,8,543,11,040,14,720,14,719,14,719,15,360,20,480,20,479,20,479,26,240,34,960,34,959,34,959,37,600,50,080,50,079,50,079,50,080,66,784,66,783,66,783,88,960,118,080,118,079,118,079,157,440,209,920,209,919,209,919,211,840,282,560,282,559,282,559,282,560,376,720,376,719,376,719,502,880,502,879,502,879,670,896,670,895,670,895,896,1,192,1,584,1,583,1,583,2,048,2,736,2,735,2,735,2,736,3,648,3,647,3,647,4,800,6,432,6,431,6,431,6,400,8,544,8,543,8,543,11,040,14,720,14,719,14,719,15,360,20,480,20,479,20,479,26,240,34,960,34,959,34,959,37,600,50,080,50,079,50,079,50,080,66,784,66,783,66,783,88,960,118,080,118,079,118,079,157,440,209,920,209,919,209,919,211,840,282,560,282,559,282,559,282,560,376,720,376,719,376,719,502,880,502,879,502,879,670,896,670,895,670,895,896,1,192,1,584,1,583,1,583,2,048,2,736,2,735,2,735,2,736,3,648,3,647,3,647,4,800,6,432,6,431,6,431,6,400,8,544,8,543,8,543,11,040,14,720,14,719,14,719,15,360,20,480,20,479,20,479,26,240,34,960,34,959,34,959,37,600,50,080,50,079,50,079,50,080,66,784,66,783,66,783,88,960,118,080,118,079,118,079,157,440,209,920,209,919,209,919,211,840,282,560,282,559,282,559,282,560,376,720,376,719,376,719,502,880,502,879,502,879,670,896,670,895,670,895,896,1,192,1,584,1,583,1,583,2,048,2,736,2,735,2,735,2,736,3,648,3,647,3,647,4,800,6,432,6,431,6,431,6,400,8,544,8,543,8,543,11,040,14,720,14,719,14,719,15,360,20,480,20,479,20,479,26,240,34,960,34,959,34,959,37,600,50,080,50,079,50,079,50,080,66,784,66,783,66,783,88,960,118,080,118,079,118,079,157,440,209,920,209,919,209,919,211,840,282,560,282,559,282,559,282,560,376,720,376,719,376,719,502,880

Racing rivals find normal routine mundane

Global adventure that gives fresh perspective

By EDWARD GORMAN
SAILING CORRESPONDENT

IT IS now more than six weeks since the BT Global Challenge came to an end, when the crews on the 14 identical 67-foot yachts crossed the finish line at Southampton after racing round the world to an ecstatic welcome from friends and family. However, now that the race is over and the excitement has passed, the 150 or so full-time volunteers who gave up jobs, relationships or sold homes to take part in the race are back to normal life.

They have circumnavigated the globe — the dream that fired them throughout the past two years — and reality has reassured itself in the form of home and office life, if they are lucky, or looking for a job, if they are not.

After Sir Chay Blyth's first race four years ago, the British Steel Challenge, a number of crew volunteers returned home unable to get back into the groove. Some had broken marriages or had lost long-term relationships and others found it hard to find another job. Some felt the race had completely changed their perspective on life and a re-ordering of priorities was required once it was over.

The two volunteers sponsored by The Times in the last race, who had over half their berthing fee paid for by the paper, are now back at their respective jobs, coming to terms themselves with the legacy of Blyth's "great adventure".

Lucy Duncan, who sailed in Concert — the yacht that was dismantled during the first Southern Ocean leg — has been back at work on the labour ward at High Wycombe General Hospital for two weeks and, so far, she has delivered three babies, working the nightshift. Her house in Wendover is still rented out, which helped pay the bills while she was away. She is staying with her sister, Janet, who, with her husband and children, flew out to welcome Duncan at the Cape Town stopover.

Both Duncan and Capstick are settling back into their former lives reasonably well. Partly because of The Times sponsorship, they do not have the kind of crippling financial problems that some former volunteers have to contend with and both have been fortunate to return to jobs that have been kept waiting for them while they were on the high seas.

However, Duncan, more than Capstick, is struggling with the sailing bug and the desire to travel again. Aged 36 and single, she has less than Capstick, who is married with three children, and the temptation to look for more adventure is hard to resist.

Capstick is back in uniform as a mounted policeman after his adventures

"It was always going to be difficult getting back," she said yesterday. "Initially, I felt a bit disconnected and, as for work generally, it's probably too early to say what will happen. People are still pleased to see me and that hasn't worn off yet, but it's quite hard to go back to being a common or garden midwife."

"I don't think I will be happy settling into a nine-to-five life, it's difficult to go back to the same thing as if nothing has changed. I was always quite itchy-footed, but I think the race has probably left me even more so." Duncan has not been on a boat since the finish, but the team from Concert — one of the happiest crews in the fleet — is planning a get-together soon and Duncan wants to do some coastal cruising, having had her fill of racing.

"I definitely want to do more," she said. So has she caught the sailing bug? "I'm not sure really — I certainly miss it and the sea — I couldn't be further from it here. Perhaps I have got the bug and it won't be dinghy sailing on a reservoir (the only sailing she had done before the race) when I go next time."

Capstick is involved in moving house and getting to grips with running the police stables where he worked before the race. His old horse has been put out to grass while he was sailing, so he has been chopping and changing on various different animals since he got back.

"To be honest, it wasn't as hard going back to work as I thought it would be," he said. "It's a job I've done for 20 years, so being away for one year isn't that great a time. I do find myself finding some of what I'm doing rather petty — the day-to-day running of the stables is my responsibility and it is my job to see that it is done efficiently — but I look at it with a slightly different perspective now and see that, in the great scheme of things, it's not that important. I'm probably a little more tolerant than I used to be."

Capstick has found settling back into home life relatively straightforward because he returned home for brief visits to see his newborn baby, Georgia, during several of the longer stopovers. Like Duncan, he has no regrets about taking part in the race and would actively encourage those planning to sail in the next one in 2000.

"While you are doing it, you sometimes wonder what on earth you are doing, but at the end, when you cross the line at Southampton and you have sailed round the world, it's a great feeling," he said. "I feel very proud that I've done it and my attitude to anyone else, is 'go for it' — it's a brilliant experience."

Both Duncan and Capstick have found friends and colleagues have been fascinated by what they have been through and have both spent much time explaining what the nine months were like. "I never get bored of talking about it," Capstick, who wants to continue yacht racing but on inshore courses, said.

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

Duncan: on dry land

SPEEDWAY

Fire fails to destroy Hancock's title hope

By A CORRESPONDENT

GREG HANCOCK raced to victory in the Polish Grand Prix to silence more than 30,000 home fans, who were hoping one of the two Poles in the A final would top the rostrum at the Olympic Stadium in Wrocław.

It was Hancock's second grand prix win of the season — he also won gold in the opening round in the Czech Republic in May — and he is now 12 points clear at the top of the world championship rankings. His nearest challenger is another American, Billy Hamill, the defending world champion, who finished second in the meeting. Tomasz Gollob, of Poland, came third, having topped the scoring in the qualifying races before the finals. He dropped just one point in his five preliminary rides.

The meeting started two hours late because riders claimed the track conditions were unacceptable, but organisers feared crowd trouble if the event had been postponed.

Gollob, 26, is a huge sporting star in Poland and the crowd, easily the largest of the five rounds held this season, was confident he could deliver his second Polish Grand Prix success, having won here two years ago. However, his supporters were soon hushed when Hancock and Hamill raced to the first two positions. Piotr Protasiewicz finished fourth, a good enough result to secure a place in the final round in Denmark on September 20.

Hancock's success came three weeks after his van caught fire on the way to Bradford for the British Grand Prix, destroying his No 1 bike. "I was devastated after Bradford, but winning tonight has put me back on track," he said. "It is good to have a decent lead in the championship again, but I have to go to Denmark to win the meeting."

Hancock needs to finish in fifth place or higher in Denmark to become the world champion and he has the backing of Hamill, who is his partner in the Team Exide racing team and a childhood friend.

"If I am going to have to lose my title, then I would be happy to lose it to Greg," he said. "It would be like keeping it in the family."

Code of conduct that makes perfect sense

BRIAN CLARKE

an excellent conductor of electricity and anglers are lost not so much because their rods touch cables but because of arcing, sometimes over an extraordinary distance, between the two.

The other point on safety concerns flotation aids. The SAGC advises every angler to use a life-jacket or buoyancy aid when fishing from a boat. It does not mention their use when wading. Any code for game fishing would need to make good this omission.

When wading fast, heavy salmon rivers and the like, only automatic, gas-inflated life-jackets should be worn and then always. Buoyancy aids such as foam-filled fishing jackets will keep an angler afloat but not necessarily face-up, especially if he is already panicking after swallowing water. Gas-filled life-jackets turn the wearer on to his back and keep his head out of the water even if he or she is unconscious. For wearers of Neoprene chest waders, which have a tendency to lift the legs high, and so force the shoulders down, life jackets offering 275 Newtons of buoyancy are the safe option, not the 150-Newton that is most commonly so.

The third issue concerns barbless hooks. The SAGC actively encourages "the use of barbless or micro-barbed hooks" but does not go into the reasons no doubt because of limited space. They are worth spelling out. I can write of the advantages of barbless hooks from first hand experience because I have used them exclusively for the past 20 years.

They only real value of a barb on a hook is that it helps to keep a wriggly bait aboard. Most anglers also use them because they fear that, without a barb, a fish, like a bait, might get off.

Barbless hooks are more effective than barbed because there is nothing to slow penetration and so increase leverage on the hook point. Barbless hooks are less prone to opening on the strike or when playing big fish. Because they have not been weakened by having a barb cut into them they do not snap, so more fish end up securely hooked.

More fish do not get off, however, because when they are swimming line-drag holds the hook in place and if they are stationary the first principle of playing a fish — keep a tight line — maintains it there. Fish are easier to release from a hook without a barb and are not damaged in the process. Mine hardly ever leave the water because I rarely use a net and simply reach down and slip the hook out while the fish is at my feet.

So as barbless hooks help both angler and fish on a much wider scale, the SAGC code does the same. Young people should be brought up on it. Old hands should adopt it. We need something of the kind for game and sea angling now.

"The Code of Conduct for Specialist Coarse Anglers" is available for £1 plus 25p postage from the SAGC, 3 Great Cob Street, Springfield, Chelmsford CM1 6LA.

□ Brian Clarke's fishing column appears on the first Monday of each month.

White: Landau
Black: Zhu Chen
Beijing, August 1997

White: Jon

Youngsters show driving ambition

By EDWARD GORMAN

THEY all want to go on the professional tour when they are older. Most have got the mannerisms of the pros off to a tee already — the wounded "Why me?" look after a sliced seven-iron, or the clenched fist of a well-judged putt — and one or two even have individually named and very large golf bags. Most of them, though — all 13 years old and under — can play some pretty serious golf and the 31st national prep schools championship at Stowe School in Buckinghamshire on Friday saw some very bright prospects grinding out good scores on the picturesque nine-hole course in front of the main school buildings.

Heavy rain on Wednesday had left the greens waterlogged, but the gusty wind sweeping the course by Friday had dried them out, leaving the putting surface slow and a little bumpy. A field of 108 boys played two rounds on the day, with scoring by Stableford and with a stroke added to par across the course to give plenty of opportunities for birdies or better. For only the second time in its history and the second time in four years, the championship was decided by a play-off.

Sam Mason, from Chigwell, who plays off ten, had looked a likely winner all day, with some prodigious hitting off the tee and a fine touch around the greens. At the halfway stage, he held the joint lead on 26 points. Alongside him were Michael Oliver, from St Edmund's School, Canterbury, who won the northern prep schools title at Stoneyhurst this year, and Kristien Boyle, from St Edwards, Reading, who impressed with his gritty consistency.

By the close, Oliver, who seemed to be fighting his own inner demons and is struggling with a backswing corrupted by playing with oversized clubs, had faded to leave Mason and Boyle tied on 50 points. On the last green, Mason had a ten-foot birdie putt for the championship, but it slid past as his father, Ken, looked to the heavens in despair.

Boyle, left, on his way to winning the play-off for the championship, while Joe Cole is disappointed at losing in the under-13 event

Even the unflappable Chris Atkinson, a former housemaster at Stowe, who has organised the event for the past 15 years, was getting carried away. "This is rather exciting isn't it?" he said as he followed the two players down the first fairway for the last time.

Mason, a chunky 13-year-old whose golfing hero is Ernie Els, of South Africa, hit a 230-yard drive straight down the middle. Boyle, who also named Els alongside Nick Faldo as his golfing greats, preceded him with a shorter, but equally straight drive. A punched six-iron from Boyle and a wedge from Mason left them side-by-side on the fringe of the green, 20ft from the hole.

The pressure was on and it was Mason who succumbed. Boyle put his first putt within inches before holing out. Mason had an almost identical stroke in prospect, but he hit it six feet past the hole and then missed from there to give Boyle his first title in golf, achieved in front of his parents and both sets of grandparents.

Afterwards, with the Stowe Putter trophy in his hands, he revealed that he has only had five lessons in just two years of playing, though he already has a handicap of 14. "I play every day," he said, "and I would like to go on the Tour if I am good enough when I'm older." Boyle had seemed relaxed, even on the extra hole. "I was a bit nervous but I knew if I looked nervous, he'd have an advantage," he said.

With Mason second, third place went jointly to Oliver, Rupert Harmsworth, of Wellesley House, and Charles Hoare, of St Edmund's, Hindhead. In the under-13s, the top scorer was Lloyd Edwards, of Caldicott, who was only three points behind Mason and Boyle, with Jonathan Howse, of the Old Hall, second and Charles Richardson, of Elstree, and Michael Ridout, of St John's, tied for third. In the under-12s, Alex Morton of the Old Hall put on a dazzling display to win with 45 points, with Luke Gutteridge, of Lochinver House, second and James Macdonald of Ridgeway, third.

Academy dispute highlights the great divide

Chris Smith, the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, sparked a storm of protest last month when he unveiled the latest plan for a national sports academy. Smith's decision to exclude the country's leading sports, suggesting that rugby, cricket and football were wealthy enough to fend for themselves, prompted one of the most heated political rows of the summer.

Maurice Lindsay, chief executive of the Rugby Football League, criticised the proposals, claiming that Smith was confusing football's relative financial good health with the impoverished state of his own sport. Lindsay's arguments were given added credibility by the news that Wigan, rugby league's most successful club, had been forced to call in outside help to try to resolve its crippling financial and managerial problems.

Lord MacLaurin of Knebworth, chairman of the England and Wales Cricket Board, hinted that if cricket was not to benefit from the National Lottery, then it should be able to sell the television rights for all of its fixtures to the highest bidder rather than be restricted to the less lucrative terrestrial deals for home Test matches.

Only the football authorities seemed to take the announcement in their stride. Football Association spokesmen calmly said that they would continue with their plans to establish centres of excellence throughout the country.

Assessing the exact financial health of each sport is difficult, with only football having attracted the kind of rigorous financial analysis needed to draw any real conclusions. Richard Baldwin, a sports specialist at Deloitte Touche, the accountancy firm, has looked at the state of finances among leading governing bodies.

The Rugby Football League had a turnover of £9.4 million in 1995 — the most recent year for which figures are available — not vastly more than the British Olympic Association saw pass through its coffers last year. The Test and Country Cricket Board turned over a more healthy £38.2 million, although much of this money is quickly returned to the counties to ensure that they stay afloat.

In contrast, the three football bodies — FA, FA Premier League and Football League — turned over £192 million in 1996, although this was inflated by the money from Euro 96. There is also a world of difference between the £65 million turnover of the Premier League and the £22 million that the Football League generated for its members. As the recent Deloitte Touche annual survey of football finance showed, the new riches of football are almost entirely enjoyed by a small number of clubs.

There seems little money to spare for youth development, either. Cricket has earmarked more than £2 million for development through a charitable trust, while rugby league can barely muster £500,000. Again, only football appears in reasonable health, having the extra funds from the Football Trust to draw upon.

Some of the sports targeted by Smith's plan also have serious question marks over the quality of their management. Athletics has been particularly poorly managed in recent years and it is questionable whether showering millions on the sport will help it to put its house in order. Governing bodies must be made to prove they are fit to receive substantial government backing before being allowed to join the academy.

Smith is not entirely to blame for the situation. The sports academy started life as a blurred idea that had more to do with politics than what sport really needs. At least Smith has tried to impose some discipline on the idea and turn it into a reality, but there is a clear lesson for all politicians that sport is not a simple vote winner and that policies require more than token gestures and some lottery money. There are many useful plans that government can pursue, but first it needs to take sport more seriously.

ALASDAIR MURRAY

► REWARDING TIMES ◀

Two Free Educational CD-Roms worth £34.94

PLUS: two Carol Vorderman videos from just £2 each

Today The Times and BVG are giving readers an exclusive opportunity to get two FREE CD-Roms, worth £34.94, in our Back to School offer — Simple Fractions (for 7 to 9 year-olds), normally £9.99 and the Hutchinson Multimedia Encyclopedia 1996, normally £24.95. You pay only 45p per title to cover postage. You can also get two Carol Vorderman videos. The Three Rs — Writing, and Punctuate Well, for £2 each, a saving of £10.99 on the normal retail price.

In addition, readers can save up to 50% on the normal prices of a top-quality selection of 22 other books, videos and CD-Roms ideal for primary and secondary school children. These include the Hutchinson reference books, including the 1997 hardback edition of the Hutchinson Encyclopedia, for £19.99, normally £40, and four excellent Hutchinson dictionaries. Our CD-Rom selection includes the Penguin Hutchinson Reference Library at £5.99, normally retailing at £39.95. Available at £14.99 each, a fraction of the normal price of £39.95, are CD-Rom versions of the Attica World Atlas, Hutchinson's History Library and Hutchinson's Science Library.

Readers can also save more than 50% on a further seven Carol Vorderman videos which provide an innovative approach to developing arithmetic, reading and writing skills, all for just £5.99 each, a saving of £7 each. In addition, readers of The Times can save £4 on each of four CD-Roms from the Sats range which include Maths for seven and 11 year-olds and English for seven and 11 year-olds. They are designed to support work carried out in the classroom and to help with revision.

To get your free CD-Roms, or the discounted videos and books just collect four of the six tokens appearing in The Times this week and send them with your remittance with the order form.

THE TIMES/BVG ORDER FORM

Complete this form and send it with your four tokens plus credit card details or a cheque/postal order, payable in pounds sterling to BVG Airdio Ltd, to: The Times/Back to School Offer, Unit 6 Industrial Estate, Brecon, Powys, Wales LD3 8LA. (Readers in the Republic of Ireland must pay by credit card only.) Closing date for receipt of orders is October 13, 1997. This offer is strictly limited to one application per household. You may only request one copy of each free CD-Rom and video at £2. Prices apply to orders from readers in the British Isles and include p&p. Readers overseas should call +44 1874 611 633 ext 251 for a quotation for p&p. Allow 28 days for delivery.

CITY	RRP	YOU PAY
PRIMARY SCHOOL
CD-ROMS
A1 Simple Fractions (age 7-9)	£9.99	45p postage
B1 Sats Maths (age 7)	£9.99	£5.99
B2 Sats Maths (age 11)	£9.99	£5.99
B3 Sats English (age 7)	£9.99	£5.99
B4 Sats English (age 11)	£9.99	£5.99
Buy any two of the above for £10
VIDEOS
C4 Carol Vorderman the Three Rs - Writing	£12.99	£2 p&p
C5 Carol Vorderman the Three Rs - Reading	£12.99	£5.99
C6 Carol Vorderman the Three Rs - Arithmetic	£12.99	£5.99
C3 Times Tables to Pop Music	£12.99	£5.99
Buy two additional videos for just £10
SECONDARY SCHOOL
CD-ROMS
R1 Hutchinson Multimedia Encyclopedia 1996	£24.95	45p postage
R4 Penguin Hutchinson Reference Library	£39.95	£5.99
R8 Hutchinson Multimedia Encyclopedia 1997	£39.95	£9.99
R2 Hutchinson History Library	£39.95	£14.99
R3 Hutchinson Science Library	£39.95	£14.99
R9 Attica World Atlas	£39.95	£14.99
VIDEOS
C1 Carol Vorderman - Punctuate Well (at any age)	£12.99	£2 p&p
C2 Carol Vorderman - Spell Well (at any age)	£12.99	£5.99
C7 Carol Vorderman - Nat Curriculum GCSE Maths-Foundations	£12.99	£5.99
C8 Carol Vorderman - Nat Curriculum GCSE Maths-Intermediate	£12.99	£5.99
C9 Carol Vorderman - Nat Curriculum GCSE Maths-Higher	£12.99	£5.99
C10 Carol Vorderman - Nat Curriculum GCSE English	£12.99	£5.99
Buy any two of the above for £10
BOOKS
R10 Hutchinson Dictionary of World History (pb, 699pp)	£14.99	£9.99
R11 Hutchinson Dictionary of the Arts (pb, 564pp)	£14.99	£9.99
R12 Hutchinson Dictionary of Ideas (pb, 583pp)	£14.99	£9.99
R13 Hutchinson Dictionary of Science (pb, 678pp)	£14.99	£9.99
Buy the complete set of dictionaries R10-R13 RRP £59.96 for just £24.95
R15 Hutchinson 97 Encyclopedia (Hardback)	£40	£19.99

Total order value £

Mr/Mrs/Miss/Ms/Other Initials Surname

Address

Postcode Day Tel

CREDIT CARD PAYMENT Card no: Expiry date

Mastercard Visa

Name on card Signature

Supply address of registered cardholder on a separate sheet of paper if different from the above

IT WOULD HELP US IF YOU WOULD ANSWER THESE QUESTIONS

1. Which one of the following age groups do you fall into? (Please tick box)

15-24 25-34 35-44 45-54 55-64 65+

2. Which national daily newspaper(s) do you buy regularly (4-6 copies each week)?

3. Which national daily newspaper(s) do you buy occasionally (3 copies or less)?

4. Which national Sunday newspaper(s) do you buy regularly (2-4 copies a month)?

If you would prefer not to receive information and offers from organisations carefully selected by The Times, please tick

CRICKET

Sore draw puts dampener on Glamorgan hopes

BY ALAN LEE
CRICKET CORRESPONDENT

IF THIS is to be the last year of the county championship as we know it, the finale is a real page-turner. Just when the cluttered title race seemed to be taking a streamlined shape at last, the leaders have all tripped up in turn. Three weeks remain and the number of contenders must now be expanded to seven.

Tomorrow at Lord's, the First-Class Forum of the England and Wales Cricket Board (ECB) — effectively, the 18 counties — will consider the proposed reshaping of the championship under the MacLaurin blueprint. Whether they endorse or amend it, the championship is due for radical change, possibly as soon as next summer.

Everyone is in agreement that this must happen and few will be seduced by the drama of the present contest. Standards remain too inconsistent, the shortcomings of the system transparent. A close and open championship, superficially welcome though it is, may be thought to underscore the common mediocrity. If the events on Saturday are seen in hindsight to have been influential, expect some loud complaints. Glamorgan, who began the day with every prospect of extending their advantage at the top, were controversially denied by Leicestershire's complacency over the weather forecast. Most of the square at Grace Road was left uncovered overnight and the game was abandoned.

Yorkshire, pursuing victory in the Roses match, were equally plucked when the covers at Old Trafford leaked. There, too, no play was possible and, although Kent did get some cricket at Portsmouth, they were restricted to bonus points when the Hampshire captain, John Stephenson, declined to indulge in the currency of joke bowling and contrived targets.

Championship Commentary

Gloucestershire, granted the chance to go to the top of the table, fell 22 runs short of a target of 261 set by Nottinghamshire, and Worcestershire, having evened the score, collapsed to 49 all out and defeat by 169 runs against Middlesex, who came back into the equation, along with Surrey.

The top seven are now covered by 22 points and it is possible that the title could be won with only seven victories in all. Two years ago, Middlesex and Northamptonshire each won 12 games and neither of them finished as champions. Warwickshire, having won a staggering 14 of their 17 games.

In that summer of 1995, only 29 games were drawn, partly a reflection of the good weather but more pertinently of the reluctance of teams to fight for draws when they could not win. It was all making for some depressingly soft cricket and the reintroduction of points for draws can now be judged favourably.

Last year, there were 50 draws and this year there have already been 59. Draws are not necessarily a good thing, but, in this instance, they represent a toughening of attitudes, a pursuit of new incentives. My preferred route would now be the abolition of bonus points and an increased reward for draws, perhaps from three points to six.

The three points available will initially have seemed scant justice to Matthew Maynard and his Glamorgan side on Saturday. Already deprived of the first day by rain, they had engineered a winning position with two days of positive cricket. They were scuppered by a dodgy weather forecast and some dubious thinking from the Leicestershire management.

The pitch itself, and its immediate surrounds, were covered overnight on Friday in line with ECB regulations. The rest of the square was open to the elements and, instead of the dry night forecast, heavy rain fell between midnight and 7am, leaving the ground unfit and the umpires no alternative to abandonment.

Glamorgan were incensed and will make their protest to the ECB. The umpires must also give an interpretation of events in their report and it is possible that Leicestershire will face censure. The game, however, must stand as a draw, a valuable ground lost for Glamorgan.

Yesterday, David Collier, chief executive of Leicestershire, reacted to criticism of his club with candour. "We are as desperately sorry about this as Glamorgan are," he said. "Everyone feels very strongly about it and I appreciate there are some pretty strong views. In their position, we would feel the same way. Glamorgan do, although I must say they have shown us no bitterness, only disappointment."

The problem arose when we started to cut the outfield on Friday night. We wanted to complete the mowing early on Saturday and, as our local weather forecast was clear, we did not put the extra sheeting across the square. Like the weather forecasters, we were caught out."

Collier denies any wrongdoing. "We abided by regulations and I cannot see how any action against us would be appropriate. I will say, though, that we need to look back and learn, asking ourselves if we would do the same things again."

For Glamorgan, such soul-searching comes too late. They now face a tough fixture at the Oval tomorrow while Kent, level on points at the top, have a mouthwatering home game against Gloucestershire.

Ruddock, of Cald, is bowled by Miller but his team went on to win by 56 runs

Caldy's bowling retains title

By JOHN STERN

LORD'S (Shipton-under-Wychwood won toss): Cald beat Shipton-under-Wychwood by 56 runs

THE TRADITION of the National Village Championship final, has dictated that the players and their partners are entertained to dinner by the sponsors on the eve of the match.

This year, however, no dinner took place, indicative of a sad decline in the interest in the competition by the present sponsor, Alliance and Leicester. In addition, it spurred MCC's offer of four complimentary Lord's boxes. It did not even have a single advertising board around the boundary's edge.

Three seam bowlers, Paul Snell, of Shipton, Jason Cooper and Brett Saunders, of Cald, in the Wirral, produced the most notable performances and Cald retained their National Village Championship, no batsman reached fifty and run-scoring was consistently tricky business.

Snell, a right-arm opening bowler who has played for Moseley in the Birmingham League, found his line immediately and removed Phil Eymond's off stump in his third over. Cald's first boundary was not scored until the ninth over when Craig Findlay straight drove Snell.

A partnership of 59 for the sixth wicket between Keith Findlay and Phil Macdonald, took Cald to 150 but they lost four wickets for nine runs three of which were run-outs, to close their innings on 166 for nine.

Shipton expected much from opening batsman Stewart Gillett but he was bowled by Jason Cooper in the second over for four. Cooper took the next two wickets to fall as well, leaving Shipton 28 for three.

Once Felix MacDonald, having hit two sixes into the Mount Stand, was out for 38, Shipton had little batting left. Sam Mendes, theatre director and middle-order batsman, who made 48 in Shipton's semi-final victory over Millstead, yesterday scored only eight.

Saunders took the important wicket of John Hartley, also a former Moseley player, and then three more of the last five to take to finish with four for 26.

Edwards gives England hope for World Cup

Sarah Potter believes that England and South Africa show some promise

England's determination to extend their winning 2-1 margin in the five-match one-day international series with South Africa was thwarted when the match at Milton Keynes on Saturday was washed out. The players' disappointment at not being able to play a game due to be televised live will be tempered with nervous expectation. Their squad for the World Cup will be announced later this week.

England will name 14 players for their trip to India in December. The team spirit and improved skill level of the players suggests that the World Cup party will not include any new names.

The problem for the selectors is that they have had 15 players in the squad this summer. It is likely that the two players who have not featured in the matches against South Africa are the most vulnerable.

Lucy Pearson is a left-arm medium-pace bowler of great promise. The tall East Anglian will doubtless feature in future England plans, particularly for Test matches. Bev Nicholson, though, has played at this level and has the added advantage of being an all-rounder.

The rules of the World Cup competition prohibit any nation from changing their squad, even for injury, once the tournament is underway. It follows that versatility will be important.

Conrad Hunte, the South Africa coach, acknowledges this versatility as one of England's strengths. As the two nations are in the same group and open the tournament in Hyderabad on December 10, this series has been especially valuable.

"When we arrived, we were very raw," Hunte said. "I knew we had potentially good players, but we didn't know how good. It has been a great learning curve in which we have identified two areas where we need to improve. First, to bowl consistently in the channel of off stump, and second is the need to string together consecutive partnerships."

The latter will require an improvement in the running between wickets. In each South Africa innings of the series, there were at least three run-outs. By the fourth game at Hinkley, rain had after South Africa had faced 27 overs, it was clear that Hunte's inexperienced charges had lost confidence in their calling and judgment. "Our girls know they have to work hard to learn how to assess a run, call correctly and trust their batting partner," Hunte said. "but overall, the win at Taunton has confirmed our potential. We can take many positive things from this series."

As, indeed, can England. They were expected to win, but it was the overall professionalism of the performances that impressed. Careless running at Bristol was quickly corrected and the sloppy fielding and bowling at Taunton was markedly absent at Lord's. In the truncated match at Hinkley, England confirmed their superiority with cricket as sharp as the creases in their new trousers. Sponsorship money lifted spirits.

"It's the general improvement that has been most pleasing," Megan Lear, the coach, said. "Our bowling needs more work and we hope to involve Mike Gatting and Desmond Reeve again through the autumn. All the players have put in a lot of effort and there have been some outstanding performances."

Edwards: century

The new star is Charlotte Edwards. The 17-year-old's century at Taunton was unquestionably the highlight of the series. Her tendency to play across the line on the outside will need some fine tuning in the weeks ahead, but her otherwise classic technique and unexpected power already mark her as a special talent. Janette Brittin, unavailable for the first three matches this summer, is England's most prolific batsman.

The prospect of an Edwards-Brittin opening partnership is more than exciting. It may yet ensure that England retains the World Cup.

Maynard: frustrated

TABLE

	P	W	L	D	Net	Points
M Kent (4)	14	6	4	4	36	48/197
M Glamorgan (10)	14	6	2	6	38	45/197
M Gloucester (13)	14	6	4	4	31	48/197
M Yorkshire (8)	14	6	2	2	32	47/192
M Middlesex (5)	14	6	4	4	38	44/178
M Surrey (5)	14	6	3	3	36	43/177
M Wores (7)	14	4	2	3	38	44/178
M Warwickshire (8)	14	4	2	2	33	41/158
M Essex (5)	14	4	4	3	33	47/158
M Leicestershire (11)	14	3	3	11	31	46/149
M North (17)	14	4	4	3	39	49/158
M Worcestershire (15)	14	4	4	3	39	42/150
M Somerset (11)	14	4	2	2	34	52/148
M Hampshire (14)	14	4	2	4	38	33/128
M Durham (16)	14	4	2	2	31	48/118
M Northants (14)	14	2	7	2	24	38/118
M Derbyshire (2)	14	1	7	2	27	30/111
M Sussex (12)	15	1	8	2	21	31/103

(1998 positions in brackets)
□ Worcestershire's record includes eight points as side batting last in match where scores finished level

Ashes Test competition

The winner of The Times Ashes Test competition is S Shipley of Coventry who managed to accumulate a total of 60,000 points over the six-match series. He wins a 10-day trip for two to Barbados to see the West Indies play. In second place with 49,370 points was C Forde of Leeds. The winners of a pair of tickets to one day of the Westworth Golf Toyota World Match Play were G Haigh of Liverpool and S Shipley. G Haigh scored 21,180 points for The Oval Test while S Shipley achieved a score of 20,140.

The game allowed you to challenge our cricket experts. Success or failure was based not just on being right or wrong, but on how right or wrong you were.

Results for the sixth Test, with our predictions in brackets, are: Steve Waugh made 28 runs (75); Graham Thorpe made 89 runs (70); the first innings score for the hosts batting first was 180 (360); Glenn McGrath conceded 109 runs (100); the highest batting partnership in the sixth Test was 79 (140).

To check your score take the result for each question, calculate how many runs you were right or wrong by, multiply the difference by your stake and the answer is how much you won or lost. For example, Steve Waugh 28 runs. If you went more than 75 you lose 47 times your stake (75 minus 28); if you went less, you win 47 times your stake.

The leaderboard below shows the top 12 finishing in the competition.

NAME	POINTS
S Shipley	60000
C Forde	49370
R Edwards	39600
S Rudge	38175
R Sreekandappa	29050
C Swales	27915
M Wallbridge	27800
S Shipley	26100
L Rubin	22470
M Dowd	18630
J Donohue	18390
A Yates	9600

BRITANNIC ASSURANCE county championship

Derbyshire v Somerset

DERBY (first day of four): Derbyshire (A) drew with Somerset (B)

DERBYSHIRE: First innings 229 (M P Cooper 78, P A J DeFreitas 56, S J Lacey 50; A R Cuddihy 4 for 96)

SOMERSET: First innings 229 (M P Cooper 78, P A J DeFreitas 56, S J Lacey 50; A R Cuddihy 4 for 96)

Second innings

D G Cook not out 55

M R May c Turner b Shine 1

A J Harris not out 26

Score (1st 1st 1st 1st 1st 1st)

Total (2 wickets) 67

FALL OF WICKETS: 1-8, 2-81.

BOWLING: Cuddihy 0-10-10; Shine 5-0-45-1; Rowe 5-1-29-1; Mousley 4-0-35-3-4.

SOMERSET: First innings

P C L Holloway c Kirtley b Cork 58

S G Eccles c Kirtley b Cork 36

M Luffwell b Cork 31

M Luffwell not out 21

G D Rose not out 26

Score (1st 1st 1st 1st 1st 1st)

Total (5 wickets dec, 58.4 overs) 261

S Hinchey, A R Cuddihy, Mousley, Alfred and H H Shaw 50 not out

FALL OF WICKETS: 1-36, 2-41, 3-40, 4-85, 5-107

BOWLING: Mousley 10-1-31-0; DeFreitas 11-3-44-0; Harris 10-1-27-1; Cook 9-1-37-2; Lacey 14-4-2-75-5; Cooper 1-1-38-0; Lacey 7-0-47-0; DeFreitas 20-0-0-0

GLoucestershire: First innings 282

(M W Maynard 71, S Young 58, H J Lacey 40 for 49)

Second innings

M G N Widdows c Ashby b Tolley 30

T H C Hancock c Noble b Owen 58

S Young c Johnson b Evans 14

R I Dawson c Ashby b Owen 21

M W Maynard not out 30

Y C Russell c Noble b Ashby 36

Y C Russell not out 36

Score (1st 1st 1st 1st 1st 1st)

Total (6 wickets dec, 58.4 overs) 282

FALL OF WICKETS: 1-36, 2-41, 3-40, 4-85, 5-107

BOWLING: Smith 5-1-19-0; Lacey 10-4-42-3; Lawrence 6-0-29-2; Young 5-2-13-0; Ashby 4-1-14-0; Tolley 6-1-38-0; Lacey 7-0-47-0; DeFreitas 20-0-0-0

GLoucestershire: First innings 282

(M W Maynard 71, S Young 58, H J Lacey 40 for 49)

Second innings

M G N Widdows c Ashby b Tolley 30

T H C Hancock c Noble b Owen 58

S Young c Johnson b Evans 14

R I Dawson c Ashby b Owen 21

M W Maynard not out 30

Y C Russell c Noble b Ashby 36

Y C Russell not out 36

Score (1st 1st 1st 1st 1st 1st)

Total (6 wickets dec, 58.4 overs) 282

FALL OF WICKETS: 1-36, 2-41, 3-40, 4-85, 5-107

BOWLING: Smith 5-1-19-0; Lacey 10-4-42-3; Lawrence 6-0-29-2; Young 5-2-13-0; Ashby 4-1-14-0; Tolley 6-1-38-0; Lacey 7-0-47-0; DeFreitas 20-0-0-0

Leicestershire v Glamorgan

LEICESTERSHIRE (first day of four): Leicestershire (A) drew with Glamorgan (B)

LEICESTERSHIRE: First innings 144 (M Batts 5 for 94)

GLAMORGAN: First innings 144 (M Batts 5 for 94)

Second innings

R R Montgomery c and b Coe 73

A J Shaw c Bown b Brown 25

A J Shaw c Bown b Brown 25

R J Bailey c Spaight b Batts 46

D J G Sales c Wastall b Batts 15

A J Pennington b Batts 15

Score (1st 1st 1st 1st 1st 1st)

Total (6 wickets dec, 58.4 overs) 350

FALL OF WICKETS: 1-70, 2-201, 3-278, 4-285, 5-287, 6-287, 7-288, 8-317

BOWLING: Batts 10-0-44-0; Spaight 19-3-61-4; Udal 14-4-45-2; Stephenson 12-0-81-1; Stoddart 10-0-64-1; White 1-0-17-0

Umpires: A Challen and D J Constant

Leicestershire v Glamorgan

LEICESTERSHIRE (first day of four): Leicestershire (A) drew with Glamorgan (B)

LEICESTERSHIRE: First innings 144 (M Batts 5 for 94)

GLAMORGAN: First innings 144 (M Batts 5 for 94)

Second innings

R R Montgomery c and b Coe 73

A J Shaw c Bown b Brown 25

A J Shaw c Bown b Brown 25

R J Bailey c Spaight b Batts 46

D J G Sales c Wastall b Batts 15

A J Pennington b Batts 15

Score (1st 1st 1st 1st 1st 1st)

Total (6 wickets dec, 58.4 overs) 350

FALL OF WICKETS: 1-70, 2-201, 3-278, 4-285, 5-287, 6-287, 7-288, 8-317

BOWLING: Batts 10-0-44-0; Spaight 19-3-61-4; Udal 14-4-45-2; Stephenson 12-0-81-1; Stoddart 10-0-64-1; White 1-0-17-0

Umpires: A Challen and D J Constant

Leicestershire v Glamorgan

LEICESTERSHIRE (first day of four): Leicestershire (A) drew with Glamorgan (B)

LEICESTERSHIRE: First innings 144 (M Batts 5 for 94)

GLAMORGAN: First innings 144 (M Batts 5 for 94)

Second innings

R R Montgomery c and b Coe 73

A J Shaw c Bown b Brown 25

A J Shaw c Bown b Brown 25

R J Bailey c Spaight b Batts 46

D J G Sales c Wastall b Batts 15

A J Pennington b Batts 15

Score (1st 1st 1st 1st 1st 1st)

Total (6 wickets dec, 58.4 overs) 350

FALL OF WICKETS: 1-70, 2-201, 3-278, 4-285, 5-287, 6-287, 7-288, 8-317

BOWLING: Batts 10-0-44-0; Spaight 19-3-61-4; Udal 14-4-45-2; Stephenson 12-0-81-1; Stoddart 10-0-64-1; White 1-0-17-0

Castle lost in the fog as Sky clouds the issue

One of the first things you notice about Sky's tennis coverage is how extraordinarily like the BBC's it is. Now you might expect to say that about a number of sports that the two broadcasters have in common, but you cannot because Sky puts its own unmistakable stamp on most of them. From Martin Tyler and Andy Gray on football, to Keith Heunen and Julian Ryder on motorcycling. It is a style characterised by enthusiasm, decibels and, above all, more words per minute than you will ever hear on the BBC. Until you get to tennis.

Suddenly, the satellite channel responds to the sound of silence. On Wednesday, when I dropped in on Henman against Muster at the US Open, minutes passed before anybody commented on the game, let alone brought me up to date with the score. Eventually, the voice of Gerry Williams interrupted: "Henman leads by two sets to love, but is 2-1 down in the third with a break against him." This was followed by still more silence, the like of which has not been heard since Dan Maskell gave up Wimbledon. What happened next is my fault. Two-one down with a break against when you are playing the No 5 seed, I wrongly interpreted as a turning point. That is how I came to miss the best match Henman has played for months. What happened on Friday, however, was not my fault and showed that while Sky may sound like the BBC, it cannot always match the corporation for patriotic commitment. All afternoon, Andrew Castle, Sky's anchorman, had been curiously vague about when we might see Henman against Ferreira. This was surprising because the order of play, displayed both on CeeFax and Skytext, clearly indicated that the satellite network should be in for an early-evening ratings boost with the match expected on at about 6pm. Six o'clock came and went — and still Williams concentrated on the entertaining game between Kafelnikov and Woodforde. But by 6.30pm, Woodforde had wrapped it up. Surely, it was time for Henman now. Wrong, said a caption — Henman against Ferreira would be on Sky Sports 2 at the surprisingly specific time of 8pm.

MATTHEW BOND
TV ACTION REPLAY

It did not take too long to discover that the reason for the precise start was that Sky had abandoned plans to show the match live. There was live rugby league on Sky Sports 1 and live first division football on Sky Sports 3. The result?

Not-at-all-live tennis would have to wait until Sky Sports 2 got underway at 8pm — and only when the scheduled golf had been postponed.

By 7.30pm, any half-way serious tennis fan would have known it was all over and Sky had tossed a golden opportunity away. In the studio in London, Castle and Peter Fleming, his regular guest, were about to have to do an awful lot of pretending. "I think this is a big challenge for Tim — there's a danger of a let-down," Fleming said half-heartedly. "Indeed," Castle agreed.

Saturday, however, was a better day. Rusedski won during the live afternoon coverage and was followed by entertaining victories for both Hingis and Sampras. The Sky commentators, however, were still sounding awfully like the BBC, especially when Williams teamed up with Bill Threlfall, his former BBC colleague.

There was more to come, though. Midway through Hingis v Likhovtseva, the faintly annoying Williams explained that both players had been given instructions by the umpire to take a longer break at the change of ends. It fitted in better with the television advertisements, he explained disapprovingly. Shortly afterwards, Sky's producer went to an ad break while Williams was still talking.

Where Sky's tennis coverage normally does differ from the corporation's is in the studio. In the past, Castle and Fleming have virtually come to blows as they differ on points of technique and tactics. For the US Open, however, they are concentrating on agreeing with each other and looking almost as pretty as Annabel Croft, who joined them yesterday. Fleming, whose analysis is normally top class, seems particularly subdued, to the point where even Castle seems worried

Cape Town and Buenos Aires will this week lead attempts to take the Olympic torch down a new route

Bidding to bask in glow of the Games

Between now and Friday at 5.30pm, the International Olympic Committee (IOC), in the Theatre de Beaulieu in Lausanne, will face a challenge to the future well-being of the world, let alone to its Olympic movement. It has five days to decide which of five cities, each prepared to mortgage between $1.5 billion and $2 billion to host the Games of 2004, should be entrusted with the Olympic rings. It is never easy when such prestige, such privilege and such enormous power is involved.

But neither is it an exaggeration to suggest that the IOC can affect the emancipation of the world. Cape Town is on its agenda and just consider that, if the 110 men and women with the vote should accede to the oratory of Nelson Mandela on Friday they would not only send the Olympic flame where it has never before but also commit the flame to a breathtaking route through many of the world's most volatile places.

Cape Town's submission involves the flame coming down from Olympia, through Istanbul, via Beirut and the Gaza Strip and then from Cairo to Tripoli and through 30 African capitals until it reaches Robben Island, where it would light a flame of remembrance at the site of the prison that housed Mandela for so many years.

We know, or rather we sense sceptically, that it is not going to happen. Mandela will entreat them on Friday to expand their minds to understand the African word Ubuntu, which means compassion and humanity. He thanks them for assisting in the first South African dream, freedom, for 32 years, the Olympics were denied to South Africa, denied as a humanitarian effort to break apartheid.

Now, the very symbol of anti-racism, Mandela, is asking the same members who orchestrated his country's isolation to remember Baron Pierre de Coubertin's vision to enable sports, improve the human race and increase understanding between people.

ROB HUGHES

The irony should be lost on no one, though one Italian, Primo Nebiolo, a manipulator in the extreme, is certain that his persuasion will defeat Mandela's. The votes, even as far as Cape Town, are that Nebiolo's Rome will regain the Olympic flame that it last lit in 1960, that the lure of Rome's grandiosity, the prospect of closing all hotels in the Via Veneto to all but the Olympic family, and the influence of Nebiolo, has put the Olympic Games in the bag.

He does not hide his lust for self-promotion: he is a member of the Olympic club, he is president of the International Amateur Athletic Federation and has appointed himself honorary president of the Rome bid. And Dr Nebiolo is not shy of using each of those offices in his own kind of circle. So, if the "secret" ballot on Friday is already spoken for, is this week a hollow charade? Is it so manipulative?

The bidders fear it, yet spend millions on promoting their cause, on winning and dining the most exclusive VIPs on earth, on bowing from whatever government rank they themselves occupy to these holders of the votes.

If Cape Town thinks it offers something unique, then so does Buenos Aires. There has never been an Olympics in South America: theirs would also be an untrodden route for the flame.

A third less foul air still compares ill to Stockholm, where conservation of the environment is one trump card and where the compact arenas appeal to the athletes. More than 50, including

ROME
FOR: proven hosts, overall concept rated excellent by IOC evaluation team. Via Veneto grandeur appeals to members. Nebiolo power.
AGAINST: Traffic hell, mistrust of claims on hospitals and crime. Nebiolo aloofness.
STOCKHOLM
FOR: Athletics choice, acrobatically, atmosphere conducive to performance. Guarantees trusted by IOC.
AGAINST: Public antipathy, bombs.
CAPE TOWN
FOR: Scenic beauty beneath Table Mountain, rising African potential, contributing to human ideal.
AGAINST: Crime and political uncertainty. Capetown claims that crime will be gone by 2004; so, alas, will President Mandela.
ATHENS
FOR: Bringing the Games home, repaying the Olympic debt. Compact sites.
AGAINST: Heat, pollution, congestion. Poor attendance at World Athletic Championships.
BUENOS AIRES
FOR: Persistence, fifth bid, the only founding IOC nation yet to host. Exclusive "Olympic corridor" on banks of River Plata.
AGAINST: Doubts over $1.25 billion budget, distance from Western capitals.

such famous names as Sergey Bubka, Wilson Kipketer, Carl Lewis and Ferenc Puskas, have formed an Athletes' Council supporting the Stockholm bid.

In Athens last month, during the poorly attended world athletics championships, Ato Boldon, the sprinter, was at the Swedish Embassy, articulating his support for Stockholm.

But would the members break with tradition and actually heed the word of those who take part? There is no track record of the Olympic fathers ever doing so, perhaps cruelly, given that Stockholm has endured nine arson or bomb attacks at sporting venues during this campaign. Arne Ljungqvist, Sweden's IOC member, said that he hoped the IOC would listen to "the voice of the athletes and not the sound of explosions".

From Rome to Cape Town, there are those who wait and pray. The South African city knows that it must convince 110 people in the world that it can erase crime, just as it has begun to overcome apartheid. Ever optimistic, Cape Towners have put a drape across an unfinished flyover. It reads: "The Olympics will take care of unfinished business."

Sports Letters may be sent by fax to 071-782 5211. They must include a daytime telephone number.

SPORTS LETTERS

e-mail to: letters@the-times.co.uk

Atherton and English cricket

From Mr Tim Steele

Sir, There should never have been a question of Mike Atherton resigning because of uncertainty over the extent of confidence which the selectors or public had in him.

Although his record is not perfect, the England team's performance this summer in holding the best team in the world to a 2-3 series result is by no means undistinguished, especially considering the last time Australia toured this country.

In addition to this: a) he is not yet 30 — age should not be a consideration; b) his batting form is still good enough to warrant his inclusion in the Test team on form alone; c) his tactical captaincy, especially on Saturday of the final Test, has been excellent; d) There is a singular lack of plausible replacements.

Recent history has shown how short-sighted it is to hound captains from their post when there is public dissatisfaction with the team's performance.

Yours faithfully, TIM STEELE, 31 High Street, Milton, Cambridge.

From Mr Dennis Berry

Sir, Amid all the agonising about the state of English cricket, why do the correspondents not address the real problem? Cricket is a mind game, but apart from the odd pep-talk in the dressing room little else appears to be done about it.

The Australians are told that they are the best team in the world and they believe it. They approach every game with the mind-set of invincibility. Every ball is bowled, fielded or stroked with conviction. Self-doubt is eradicated and positivism rules.

The English team has equally good techniques but without the mental conviction to back it up, they usually fail.

Last May an article appeared in the Scotsman written by Ted Corbett and headed "Brearley to rescue England again". Unfortunately this prediction appears to have been wrong. One needs little reminding of Mike Brearley's achievements, however, of how he wrenched victory from defeat at the famous 1981 Test defeat by inspiring those amazing performances from Botham and Willis. As Rodney Hogg said of him: "He had a degree in people" — the most cerebral of all English captains.

I know Mike Brearley has a busy and developing psychotherapy practice, but I also

The wet sponge and other remarkable cures

From Mr J Taylor

Sir, Mr Samuel's comments (Sports Letters, August 25) on the properties of the magic sponge reminds me of the story told me by a friend, who in the 1950s played football for Sheffield United. During one match he was rendered unconscious by a kick to the groin.

The trainer raced on to the field to administer the cold water. He splashed some on his face and the remainder was poured down the front of his shorts. In his haste to attend the sick trainer had unfortunately picked up not the water but a bottle of surgical spirits.

The effect was certainly magical. Not only was Harry partially blinded but he developed a speed of foot unequalled in Olympic history as he ran to the touchline to find the bucket. Harry managed to splash water on his face to clear the eyes he then sat in the bucket. This also worked. He is now the father of two.

The same trainer claimed to have discovered know that he never misses a Test match anywhere in the country. Why on earth has the cricket establishment failed to employ this vast and currently utterly relevant talent? If anyone could counsel defeatism and timidity from the English agenda, this man can.

Yours faithfully, DENNIS BERRY, 11 Fairacre, Acacia Grove, New Malden, Surrey.

From Mr Vaughan Harris

Sir, To his most welcome article today (August 26) John

Woodcock would, I am sure, willingly add the other half of the "spin dimension": the skill of the best batsmen when facing the spinners.

George Headley playing H.G. Owen-Smith in The Parks in 1933, for example, on the back foot, bat raised, and the stroke at the last split second — the leg-break late cut, the rest struck past square leg.

Or else playing him off the pitch, as Hobbs did when facing Bosanquet for the first time. Or Duleep Singh facing a permanent cure for haemorrhoids, by sitting the the unfortunate sufferer in a bowl of surgical spirits. The only known side-effect is a severe case of tonsillitis.

Yours sincerely, JOHN TAYLOR, 9 Well View Rd, Kimberworth, Rotherham.

From Mr N.W. Lenton

Sir, Mr Samuel's reminds us of the miracle powers of the wet sponge in assisting sportsmen to recover.

It had other useful purposes. Once in the 1930s when Hughie Gallacher was sent off while playing for Chelsea, he uttered such a stream of obscenity at the referee that, to prevent further offence, the referee reportedly stuffed the wet sponge in Gallacher's mouth.

Yours faithfully, N.W. LENTON, 51 Manor Wood Road, Purley, Surrey.

Origin of the Ashes

From Col Oliver Lindsay

Sir, "Many are the legends about the Ashes" writes your cricket correspondent (August 23). I was not aware there were any doubts about their origin.

A large house party had filled Rupertswood near Melbourne with eight English amateur cricketers as the guests of honour. After a convivial lunch on Christmas Eve 1882 my great grandfather, Sir William Clarke, proposed a social cricket match as appropriate exercise for the gentlemen present. Wickets were pitched on the small ground laid out on the slope between his house and the railway line, an Australian team was selected from the house party, and sundry gardeners and grooms were recruited to do the more strenuous fielding in the warm sunshine.

Pat Lyons, a black-bearded Irishman who chopped wood on the estate, recalled the match forty years later: "The gentlemen did the bowling and the batting and them English cricketers could surely hit the ball. We lads were kept on the run, fetching back the fours and the sixes. It was just a light-hearted game, nobody keeping the scores, but they reckoned that the Englishmen won."

During the match one of the spectators asked my great grandmother, Janet Clarke, what prize the teams were playing for. She jokingly replied that a trophy was needed. On Christmas Day she handed two Bligh, the English cricketer, a small pottery urn. It contained the ashes of one of the balls used on the previous day. She remarked that England and Australia now had a trophy for which to play. Bligh replied that his team would ensure that the urn and its contents would be borne off to England after the coming Test matches. And, as everyone knows, the ashes have remained in England ever since.

Yours faithfully, OLIVER LINDSAY, Brookwood House, Brookwood, Woking, Surrey.

From Mr M Halliwell

Sir, Whilst I applaud a remarkable rear-guard action and an excellent victory, I still believe that the Ashes should be returned to Australia.

What other contest is fought over with the victors having to return empty-handed with nothing to show their supporters?

Yours sincerely, MARTIN HALLIWEILL, 94 Park Court, London SW11.

This week in THE TIMES

Tomorrow

Happy Wanderers? Oliver Holt watches Bolton kick off life at the Reebok Stadium in the Premiership against Everton.

Wednesday

Is Greg Rusedski still on course for the semi-finals of the US Open tennis in New York?

Thursday

First reports from the England camp preparing for the World Cup tie against Moldova.

Saturday

Prospects for the Nat-West Trophy final between Warwickshire and Essex and a look at Ferrari's chances of a home victory in the Italian Grand Prix.

FOOTBALL

Struggling City are betrayed by anxiety

Charlton Athletic 2
Manchester City 1

By Bill Edgar

EIGHT months ago, The Valley witnessed Kevin Keegan's last stand as Newcastle United manager before he succumbed to the stress of his job and resigned. While Manchester City's defeat at the same venue on Saturday is unlikely to prompt their manager, Frank Clark, into taking the same drastic step, it did increase the pressure on him that arises from the tale of two cities — the real, hard times City, and the city of the fans' great expectations.

Before the game — City's fourth in the Nationwide League first division without a win in a season already blightporters included. While the Londoners would welcome the extra revenue, City could go about seeking promotion to the Premiership in a less tense and frenetic environment.

Certainly, Charlton remained composed and their supporters stayed patient for the 48 minutes during which they trailed to a twentieth-minute header by Gerard Wiekens, from a corner by Horlock.

Bradbury, recently signed from Portsmouth for £3.5 million, could have doubled City's lead, but after out-sprinting Chapple to Symons's long ball, he was dispossessed by a diving Petterson, one of five Australian goalkeepers playing in the top two divisions.

Charlton's record signing, Mendonca, who cost a fifth of Bradbury's fee when he arrived from Grimsby in the close season, delivered a series of incisive lay-offs from his centre forward position, one of which led to the equaliser.

Barnes, the left back, was the beneficiary of Mendonca's vision in the 68th minute, charging towards the City penalty area before sending over a teasing cross that Van Blerk turned into his own net.

Sixty seconds later, the comeback was complete when the ball broke to Keith Jones 12 yards out and the midfield player's weakly-hit shot bobbed into the net for only his second goal in 85 appearances for the club. City, who badly missed Georgi Kinkladze, who bruised an ankle in midweek and showed little sign of recovery after falling behind, were beaten.

Clark, who staved off the threat of relegation after arriving at Maine Road last December, said: "We've lost ten points now this season and the only way we can turn it around is by battling. We didn't pass the ball as well as we can and we were second to every challenge." But he insisted: "I haven't lost faith in the players." He must hope City supporters continue to display equal confidence in him.

CHARLTON ATHLETIC (4-4-2): A Petterson — S Brown, R Pulus, P Chapple, A Barnes — G Newton, M Kyelele, R Jones, J Robinson — C Mendonca, S Jones.

MANCHESTER CITY (4-4-2): M Maguire — G Brown, K Barnes, I Edgworth, J van Blerk — M Summerbell, E Macdonald (capt), Souley, J. G. Williams, R Horlock — L Bradbury, G Foster.

Referee: R Harris

Clark: under pressure

ed by a Coca-Cola Cup defeat against Blackpool — Clark had spoken of the "exaggerated hysteria" surrounding the club and said that the team "must not be frightened by the hunger of the fans". However, Alan Curbishley, the Charlton Athletic manager, whose side secured victory through an own goal and a scuffed shot — typical City luck at the moment — noticed anxiety in the opposition.

"It looked like they were desperate to get their first win," Curbishley said. "They got their goal and then sat back on it. We felt they played into our hands."

One might mischievously suggest that Charlton, ground-sharers with Crystal Palace and West Ham United in the past decade, should ground-swap with City, sup-

Robertson, centre, the Heart of Midlothian forward, is fouled by Hibernian in the Edinburgh derby, which Hearts won 1-0 at Easter Road

Old Firm bid to cross new frontiers

Kevin McCarra on how the foreign legion of Rangers and Celtic must come to terms with football's fiercest rivalry

BEDLAM has its anterooms. Before the postponement of the first Old Firm meeting of the season, ritual mayhem had been scheduled to take place this evening, but not even Celtic Park, with its capacity of 47,000, could contain the city's obsession with the rivalry. The 1-1 draw between the Rangers and Celtic reserve teams at Ibrox on Saturday was watched by a crowd of 33,800.

It was the fourth-biggest attendance in Britain that afternoon. The statistic will be cited with pride by locals, who take it as proof that Glasgow still possesses the most unbridled devotion of all to football.

Others hold the darker opinion that the fanatical interest in a peripheral group of players, who just happen to be clad in evocative stripes, really testifies to the vigour of sectarianism in the West of Scotland.

Whatever the interpretation, the nature of the public reaction isolates the Old Firm from every other fixture. Until the arrival of Wim Jansen in the summer as head coach, Celtic had, almost exclusively, been managed by former players of the club. Even the sole exception, Liam Brady, is a Dubliner who had some inkling of the passions at work in Glasgow. Knowing the frenzy they awaited, those men could steel themselves to face it. Jansen can only be unprepared.

As a distinguished servant of Feyenoord, first as player and then as coach, he may have had many encounters with Ajax, but participants portray that fixture as a contest of strategy and technique. Those terms rarely have to be unpacked when the vocabulary needed to describe an Old Firm match is being set out.

No clash between Celtic and Rangers has ever been called bloodless and, as long as the attitudes of the audience remain unaltered, the teams will be scolded if they lapse into cerebral behaviour. Nonetheless, it seems that the character of this derby match cannot help but undergo a change.

Both clubs are in the midst of reconstruction and it had been expected that eight players would be appearing in an Old Firm match for the first time tonight. Only one of them, Craig Burley, of Celtic, is a Scot. That group of incomers cannot possibly be attuned to Glaswegian sentiments at an Old Firm occasion. Nor, given its unsavoury aspect, would they even wish to be on that wavelength.

Estrangement from the local culture need not prevent a person from excelling. Celtic must wish devoutly that Brian Laudrup had found the whole event foreign to him, but, instead, Rangers' Danish forward has often been the decisive presence in the fixture over the past three years. He and other overseas signings, however, are not touched by the animosities and, in Laudrup's case, the detachment may be to his benefit.

When the Old Firm encounter, whose new date is yet to be confirmed, does take place, half the figures on the pitch will be men who recognise that they have entered an important match, but do not feel that they are heirs to an ancient vendetta. Eleven of the probable recruits for a peculiarly Scottish battle were born outside the British Isles.

They are to be welcomed if they bring calm and a superior level of skill, but there are reservations over the dependency on players who have no natural affinity with the clubs that pay them so very generously.

For each Laudrup, who has come as a blessing to Scottish football, there are several others who lack conviction and whose skills are scarcely more refined than those of the native players.

It is too early to pass judgment on a new Rangers team whose members are only just getting acquainted, but the 3-0 defeat in the away leg that decided the recent European Cup tie with IFK Gothenburg left one with the feeling that some of the Scots who played for the club in the recent past would have shown greater resilience. There is no xenophobia in the opinion.

Human beings, of any nationality, find it difficult to cross frontiers. The British, above all, should appreciate that, for some of our footballers became infamous for their narrow-minded failure to settle in other countries. Once the post-Bosman euphoria has passed, all clubs may start to suspect that a core of native players is required for success.

If the Old Firm find a renewed dedication to youth development, it will stem from self-interest more than altruism. The potential rewards are already evident. In the reserve match on Saturday, Rangers had a team that included six foreigners and cost almost £10 million, but a side composed wholly of teenagers reared by Celtic drew 1-1, despite suffering two sendings-off. Many Scots who feel nothing but scorn for both clubs will still take pleasure in that result.

It was not his team's most wretched moment; that came when Paul Barnes's attempt at a scoring header at the near post became a clearance as defender would have been proud of. By the time Curreton and Hayles squandered late chances to give Rovers a win they would just about have deserved, many locals were heading for home.

Burnley languish in 23rd place, with only two points from four league games, while Rovers are among the early pace-setters, but Holloway had some advice for Waddle: "If you hit a bad ball, the rest of the players lose inspiration. They're looking to him to be 30 to 40 per cent of the team. If he just concentrates on being his ten per cent, the rest should fall into place. I'm very pleased to come here and get a point — and that speaks volumes for Burnley, doesn't it?"

BURNLEY (3-5-2): M Beardsley — S Eastwood, C Waddell, L Honey — R Howard, P Walker, D Matthews, H Gough (capt), M Ford, 45min, M Worralley — I Davidson (sub), M Mason, 70, P Barnes.

BRISTOL ROVERS (4-4-2): A Coyle — J Perry, B Gank, A Trehan, D Pritchard — F Bennett (sub), T Ramsay, 63, J Peters, I Holloway, J Curran — T Alsop, B Hayles. Referee: T Hedderley.

Waddle yet to pass on the magic at lowly Turf Moor

Burnley 0
Bristol Rovers 0

By Nick Szczepanik

IN A new authorised biography, Chris Waddle is described by Bobby Robson as an all-time great, alongside Best, Maradona and Pelé. But George Best never tried to make it as a manager. He probably knew that greatness on the field is no guarantee of greatness in the dugout: for every Franz Beckenbauer, there is a Bobby Charlton; for every Kenny Dalglish, a Peter Shilton.

Conversely, players who have never scaled the heights can find their calling at the helm: Roy Hodgson is a timely example, or even Ian Holloway, the player-manager at Bristol Rovers, the job that Waddle is attempting to master at Burnley. On the evidence of the Nationwide League second division table, not to mention the game on Saturday at Turf Moor, which ended with Burnley being booed off, Holloway is doing it rather better than Waddle; but he is in his second year.

"I really feel for him," Holloway said. "You hear the crowd moaning at what his side are doing and that affects him. I know it and I've been through it. It's not a nice period. It's time — everybody needs time."

Waddle developed the theme. "People say, 'Where's the flowing football?' but what's six weeks? It took Alex Ferguson years to get Manchester United where they are. If people haven't got time, good luck to them. I'm quite happy with the way it's going and I'll get it right."

Defensive on the field as well as in the press conference, Waddle, whose staff include Gordon Cowans and Glenn Roeder, played as sweeper, but it was not a success. He was caught in possession more than once early on and the memory of his outstanding international career became increasingly hard to conjure up. He hit long passes to opponents more often than not, he swiped at empty air instead of a through pass and once sliced the ball over his head, forcing Marlon Beresford, his goalkeeper, to nod the ball to safety.

It was not his team's most wretched moment; that came when Paul Barnes's attempt at a scoring header at the near post became a clearance as defender would have been proud of. By the time Curreton and Hayles squandered late chances to give Rovers a win they would just about have deserved, many locals were heading for home.

Burnley languish in 23rd place, with only two points from four league games, while Rovers are among the early pace-setters, but Holloway had some advice for Waddle: "If you hit a bad ball, the rest of the players lose inspiration. They're looking to him to be 30 to 40 per cent of the team. If he just concentrates on being his ten per cent, the rest should fall into place. I'm very pleased to come here and get a point — and that speaks volumes for Burnley, doesn't it?"

BURNLEY (3-5-2): M Beardsley — S Eastwood, C Waddell, L Honey — R Howard, P Walker, D Matthews, H Gough (capt), M Ford, 45min, M Worralley — I Davidson (sub), M Mason, 70, P Barnes.

BRISTOL ROVERS (4-4-2): A Coyle — J Perry, B Gank, A Trehan, D Pritchard — F Bennett (sub), T Ramsay, 63, J Peters, I Holloway, J Curran — T Alsop, B Hayles. Referee: T Hedderley.

Robson paves way for Ravanelli exit

By David Maddocks

FABRIZIO RAVANELLI appears to have played his last game for Middlesbrough. Bryan Robson, the manager, hinted that the Italian's troubled tenure at the Riverside Stadium had come to an end yesterday when he admitted that he had been unable to patch up differences between the pair.

Ravanelli was missing from the Middlesbrough team that visited Tranmere Rovers on Saturday and afterwards Robson explained that he had allowed the player to return to his native Italy. The manager suggested that the time had come to address Ravanelli's continuing problems at the club and hinted strongly that he would finally be allowed to leave.

The Italy international centre forward had started the season on Teesside when he was unable to find another club during the summer, but even though he pledged his loyalty to the club that paid a record £7.5 million for his services a year ago, the striker continued to insist privately to Robson that he could not possibly play in the Nationwide League first division during a World Cup year.

It was this stumbling-block that prevented an agreement from being reached last week when the player held talks with Steve Gibson, the Middlesbrough chairman, in an attempt to find a solution. Ravanelli made it clear he still wanted to leave and now it appears Robson has granted his wish.

"I have been talking to Ravanelli about his position and I have tried to help him as much as possible, but he says he just doesn't feel right," Robson said. "That's why I have let him go back to Italy. If he didn't feel right then I thought it was best to allow him to join up early with the squad for the international next week. We will just take it from there. There have been several inquiries for the player, but so far we have been unable to reach agreement with any club and we are still waiting now for an offer to match our valuation."

Everton were prepared to

Ravanelli: in Italy

meet Middlesbrough's asking price of £7.5 million, but they were unable to agree terms with the 29-year-old. Everton attempted to resurrect the deal last week in talks on Thursday, but Peter Johnson, the club chairman, balked at demands that added up to a total of £2 million a year.

Robson is now hoping that one of a number of foreign clubs that have made their interest known will follow with a firm offer. Borussia Dortmund, of Germany, are known to admire the player, and the Spanish sides, Real Zaragoza and Deportivo La Coruña, have made initial contacts. Perhaps most interesting for Ravanelli is the suggestion from Italy yesterday that AC Milan could make a firm offer of approaching £7 million.

Middlesbrough fared well without their restless forward on Saturday, securing a two-goal victory at Tranmere.

Derby debut goal for Juninho

By Our Sports Staff

JUNINHO scored on his debut for Atlético Madrid on Saturday night, but was still upstaged by Clarence Seedorf in the Madrid derby. Seedorf, the Holland midfielder, scored with a swerving shot from more than 40 yards to earn Real Madrid a point.

Juninho, who joined Atlético from Middlesbrough for £12 million in the summer, put his new team ahead in the sixteenth minute in the Santiago Bernabé Stadium when he scored from the edge of the area with a shot that beat Real defenders, Sanchis and Karanka, and gave Canizares, the goalkeeper, no chance.

However, his thunder was stolen by Seedorf, whose goal after 75 minutes meant that Real extended their unbeaten sequence over Atlético in the league to 12 games.

Real had the majority of the possession, but struggled to find their finishing touch until Seedorf struck. Canizares, though, had an outstanding match and constantly frustrated the attempts of Christian Vieri, Atlético's other new signing, to match Juninho's goal. Vieri, who was signed for £12.5 million from Juventus, had three clear-cut first-half chances foiled by Canizares.

Molina, the Atlético goalkeeper, had an equally impressive game, defying the best efforts of the twin strike force of Suker and Mijatovic.

The only disappointment in a rousing game was the performance of Raúl, the Real forward, who squandered several opportunities and became involved in a pushing match with Geli, the Atlético defender, after Mijatovic had been scythed down by Aguilera.

A highly satisfactory evening for Atlético was completed when Camero, the Spain midfielder, came on for the final 14 minutes and showed no sign of the hamstring tear that has kept him out of training until this week.

Marco Simone, the former AC Milan striker, scored twice as Paris Saint-Germain beat Rennes 4-1 at the Parc des Princes to stay in touch with Metz, the early leaders in the French league.

Metz retained top position with a 2-1 win at AS Monaco, the champions, on Friday evening. It was the fifth successive victory for Metz.

Leatherhead catch up with Celair

Leatherhead 2
Wealdstone 0

By Walter Gamble

THEIR clubs' fabled FA Cup days may lie some distance in the past, but the 337 supporters of Leatherhead and Wealdstone at Fetcham Grove on Saturday generated noise and atmosphere appropriate to something higher up the scale than a preliminary-round tie.

The prize, a trip to Langney Sports, of the Sussex County League, in the first qualifying round went to Leatherhead. They deserved it on the strength of an increasingly authoritative display, after surviving a shaky start at the hands of the raw, pacy talent of Mario Celair.

Celair is one of those players that managers dream of discovering. Gordon Bartlett, giving the striker only his second start for Wealdstone, said: "He's got great potential. You cannot coach that strength — those are gifts of nature, but there is a great deal to work on."

As Celair's threat faded, two goals after half-time by Webb, the second skilfully curled from 25 yards, deflated a makeshift Wealdstone side that suffered by comparison with Keith Wenham's well-organised Leatherhead team.

Wenham doubles up as part of the board of directors formed by Gerald Darby that has steadily patched up a ground to which little or none of the money generated by the Cup exploits of the Seventies was devoted. They have put in £75,000 to lift it to a B grade and will be helped towards an A grade by the family of the late Bernard Edwards, a stalwart through thick and thin, who are contributing to a new stand in his memory.

The groundwork done, Wenham was given the resources to gather a team that gained promotion from the Icis League second division last season — and so avoided league confrontation with Wealdstone, who won the third division title under Bartlett.

Whether they can go on to emulate the rise of Woking, their neighbours, remains doubtful. "Surrey is a difficult area in which to raise enthusiasm for football," Darby said. "Even if Woking went the next step up, I cannot see them getting many more people to watch them than the 2,000 or so they get at the moment. Having said that, we need success like every club. Success brings in the supporters. It helps to sell the clubs to sponsors and business."

Bartlett's hands are tied by having no reserve or youth set-up to work with while the club is ground-sharing at Edgeware Town. Wealdstone, leading a wandering existence since selling Lower Mead in 1991, have, however, high hopes of developing a new ground.

They are in continuing negotiations over gaining access to Prince Edward Playing Fields, a 42-acre site back in the club's spiritual home of Harrow, that Paul Rumens, the chairman, rates as having a "more than 50-50 chance" of coming to fruition.

LEATHERHEAD (4-4-2): S Tarr — S Lomax, E Davidson, S Lomax, G Hogg — P Flood (sub), A O'Brien, G Armit, A Winkler, S Sobhy (sub), R Arnold, 67 — R Edwards, N Webb.

WEALSTONE (3-5-2): D Bowdler — S Ashby (sub), S Gomer, 60, J Waugh, F Moore — A Galloway (sub), T Hobbs, 67, P Lamb, S Brennan, C Watson (sub), A Smith, 67, S Bowden — D Jones, M Collins. Referee: J Ford.

ITALY v ENGLAND

Sat. 11th Oct. 1997

MATCH TICKETS
FROM £150.00

+
TRAVEL OPTIONS AVAILABLE

SPORT EVENT TOURS

Tel. 0181-938-3644

Lines Open 7 days

6.30am - 11pm.

Lloyds Direct Interest Rates for Personal Customers

Telesavings	Gross %	Net %
£50,000+	7.00	5.60
£25,000+	6.80	5.44
£10,000+	6.70	5.36
£ 5,000+	6.50	5.20
£ 2,500+	6.00	4.80

This is a telephone-based saving account and is not available through Lloyds Bank branches. Interest rates may vary from time to time. This notice lists current rates. GROSS — The annual interest rate before deduction of income tax at the lower rate (where applicable). NET — The annual interest rate after deduction of tax at the lower rate. The tax shown for illustrative purposes only. Certain customers may be able to reclaim the tax from the Inland Revenue.

Interest is normally paid at the net rate unless the Account falls within an exempt category or the account-holder qualifies to receive interest gross.

These rates of interest apply with effect from 1 September 1997

Lloyds Direct
THE THOROUGHbred BANK.

Lloyds Bank Plc, 71 Lombard Street, London EC3N 3BS

FA CARLING PREMIERSHIP

EUROPE

ITALIAN LEAGUE: Atalanta 4 Bologna 2 Bari 0 Parma 2
Brescia 1 AS Roma 3; Inter Milan 2 Brescia 1; Juventus 2 Lazio 2
Lazio 2 Napoli 0; Fiorentina 1 AC Milan 1; Udinese 2 Fiorentina 3

SPANISH LEAGUE: Real Madrid 1 Atletico Madrid 1
Barcelona 2 Valencia 2; Real Betis 2 Espanol 1; Real Sociedad 2
Villarreal 2; Real Madrid 2 Espanol 1; Real Sociedad 2 Villarreal 2

GERMAN LEAGUE: Borussia Dortmund 2 Schalke 04 1
Hamburg 2 Werder Bremen 2; Schalke 04 2 Borussia Dortmund 1
Borussia Dortmund 2 Schalke 04 1; Schalke 04 2 Borussia Dortmund 1

LEAGUE POSITIONS

Team	P	W	D	L	F	A	Pts
Bayern Munich	1	5	1	0	11	5	16
Werder Bremen	2	4	1	1	11	5	13
Borussia Dortmund	3	3	2	1	11	5	11
Schalke 04	4	3	1	2	11	5	10
Hamburg	5	3	1	2	11	5	10
Villarreal	6	3	1	2	11	5	10
Real Sociedad	7	3	1	2	11	5	10
Real Betis	8	3	1	2	11	5	10
Espanol	9	3	1	2	11	5	10
Valencia	10	3	1	2	11	5	10
Atalanta	11	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bologna	12	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bari	13	3	1	2	11	5	10
Parma	14	3	1	2	11	5	10
Brescia	15	3	1	2	11	5	10
AS Roma	16	3	1	2	11	5	10
Inter Milan	17	3	1	2	11	5	10
Lazio	18	3	1	2	11	5	10
Napoli	19	3	1	2	11	5	10
Fiorentina	20	3	1	2	11	5	10
AC Milan	21	3	1	2	11	5	10
Udinese	22	3	1	2	11	5	10
Atalanta	23	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bologna	24	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bari	25	3	1	2	11	5	10
Parma	26	3	1	2	11	5	10
Brescia	27	3	1	2	11	5	10
AS Roma	28	3	1	2	11	5	10
Inter Milan	29	3	1	2	11	5	10
Lazio	30	3	1	2	11	5	10
Napoli	31	3	1	2	11	5	10
Fiorentina	32	3	1	2	11	5	10
AC Milan	33	3	1	2	11	5	10
Udinese	34	3	1	2	11	5	10
Atalanta	35	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bologna	36	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bari	37	3	1	2	11	5	10
Parma	38	3	1	2	11	5	10
Brescia	39	3	1	2	11	5	10
AS Roma	40	3	1	2	11	5	10
Inter Milan	41	3	1	2	11	5	10
Lazio	42	3	1	2	11	5	10
Napoli	43	3	1	2	11	5	10
Fiorentina	44	3	1	2	11	5	10
AC Milan	45	3	1	2	11	5	10
Udinese	46	3	1	2	11	5	10
Atalanta	47	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bologna	48	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bari	49	3	1	2	11	5	10
Parma	50	3	1	2	11	5	10
Brescia	51	3	1	2	11	5	10
AS Roma	52	3	1	2	11	5	10
Inter Milan	53	3	1	2	11	5	10
Lazio	54	3	1	2	11	5	10
Napoli	55	3	1	2	11	5	10
Fiorentina	56	3	1	2	11	5	10
AC Milan	57	3	1	2	11	5	10
Udinese	58	3	1	2	11	5	10
Atalanta	59	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bologna	60	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bari	61	3	1	2	11	5	10
Parma	62	3	1	2	11	5	10
Brescia	63	3	1	2	11	5	10
AS Roma	64	3	1	2	11	5	10
Inter Milan	65	3	1	2	11	5	10
Lazio	66	3	1	2	11	5	10
Napoli	67	3	1	2	11	5	10
Fiorentina	68	3	1	2	11	5	10
AC Milan	69	3	1	2	11	5	10
Udinese	70	3	1	2	11	5	10
Atalanta	71	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bologna	72	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bari	73	3	1	2	11	5	10
Parma	74	3	1	2	11	5	10
Brescia	75	3	1	2	11	5	10
AS Roma	76	3	1	2	11	5	10
Inter Milan	77	3	1	2	11	5	10
Lazio	78	3	1	2	11	5	10
Napoli	79	3	1	2	11	5	10
Fiorentina	80	3	1	2	11	5	10
AC Milan	81	3	1	2	11	5	10
Udinese	82	3	1	2	11	5	10
Atalanta	83	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bologna	84	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bari	85	3	1	2	11	5	10
Parma	86	3	1	2	11	5	10
Brescia	87	3	1	2	11	5	10
AS Roma	88	3	1	2	11	5	10
Inter Milan	89	3	1	2	11	5	10
Lazio	90	3	1	2	11	5	10
Napoli	91	3	1	2	11	5	10
Fiorentina	92	3	1	2	11	5	10
AC Milan	93	3	1	2	11	5	10
Udinese	94	3	1	2	11	5	10
Atalanta	95	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bologna	96	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bari	97	3	1	2	11	5	10
Parma	98	3	1	2	11	5	10
Brescia	99	3	1	2	11	5	10
AS Roma	100	3	1	2	11	5	10

LEAGUE POSITIONS

Team	P	W	D	L	F	A	Pts
Bayern Munich	1	5	1	0	11	5	16
Werder Bremen	2	4	1	1	11	5	13
Borussia Dortmund	3	3	2	1	11	5	11
Schalke 04	4	3	1	2	11	5	10
Hamburg	5	3	1	2	11	5	10
Villarreal	6	3	1	2	11	5	10
Real Sociedad	7	3	1	2	11	5	10
Real Betis	8	3	1	2	11	5	10
Espanol	9	3	1	2	11	5	10
Valencia	10	3	1	2	11	5	10
Atalanta	11	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bologna	12	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bari	13	3	1	2	11	5	10
Parma	14	3	1	2	11	5	10
Brescia	15	3	1	2	11	5	10
AS Roma	16	3	1	2	11	5	10
Inter Milan	17	3	1	2	11	5	10
Lazio	18	3	1	2	11	5	10
Napoli	19	3	1	2	11	5	10
Fiorentina	20	3	1	2	11	5	10
AC Milan	21	3	1	2	11	5	10
Udinese	22	3	1	2	11	5	10
Atalanta	23	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bologna	24	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bari	25	3	1	2	11	5	10
Parma	26	3	1	2	11	5	10
Brescia	27	3	1	2	11	5	10
AS Roma	28	3	1	2	11	5	10
Inter Milan	29	3	1	2	11	5	10
Lazio	30	3	1	2	11	5	10
Napoli	31	3	1	2	11	5	10
Fiorentina	32	3	1	2	11	5	10
AC Milan	33	3	1	2	11	5	10
Udinese	34	3	1	2	11	5	10
Atalanta	35	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bologna	36	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bari	37	3	1	2	11	5	10
Parma	38	3	1	2	11	5	10
Brescia	39	3	1	2	11	5	10
AS Roma	40	3	1	2	11	5	10
Inter Milan	41	3	1	2	11	5	10
Lazio	42	3	1	2	11	5	10
Napoli	43	3	1	2	11	5	10
Fiorentina	44	3	1	2	11	5	10
AC Milan	45	3	1	2	11	5	10
Udinese	46	3	1	2	11	5	10
Atalanta	47	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bologna	48	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bari	49	3	1	2	11	5	10
Parma	50	3	1	2	11	5	10
Brescia	51	3	1	2	11	5	10
AS Roma	52	3	1	2	11	5	10
Inter Milan	53	3	1	2	11	5	10
Lazio	54	3	1	2	11	5	10
Napoli	55	3	1	2	11	5	10
Fiorentina	56	3	1	2	11	5	10
AC Milan	57	3	1	2	11	5	10
Udinese	58	3	1	2	11	5	10
Atalanta	59	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bologna	60	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bari	61	3	1	2	11	5	10
Parma	62	3	1	2	11	5	10
Brescia	63	3	1	2	11	5	10
AS Roma	64	3	1	2	11	5	10
Inter Milan	65	3	1	2	11	5	10
Lazio	66	3	1	2	11	5	10
Napoli	67	3	1	2	11	5	10
Fiorentina	68	3	1	2	11	5	10
AC Milan	69	3	1	2	11	5	10
Udinese	70	3	1	2	11	5	10
Atalanta	71	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bologna	72	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bari	73	3	1	2	11	5	10
Parma	74	3	1	2	11	5	10
Brescia	75	3	1	2	11	5	10
AS Roma	76	3	1	2	11	5	10
Inter Milan	77	3	1	2	11	5	10
Lazio	78	3	1	2	11	5	10
Napoli	79	3	1	2	11	5	10
Fiorentina	80	3	1	2	11	5	10
AC Milan	81	3	1	2	11	5	10
Udinese	82	3	1	2	11	5	10
Atalanta	83	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bologna	84	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bari	85	3	1	2	11	5	10
Parma	86	3	1	2	11	5	10
Brescia	87	3	1	2	11	5	10
AS Roma	88	3	1	2	11	5	10
Inter Milan	89	3	1	2	11	5	10
Lazio	90	3	1	2	11	5	10
Napoli	91	3	1	2	11	5	10
Fiorentina	92	3	1	2	11	5	10
AC Milan	93	3	1	2	11	5	10
Udinese	94	3	1	2	11	5	10
Atalanta	95	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bologna	96	3	1	2	11	5	10
Bari	97	3	1	2	11	5	10
Parma	98	3	1	2	11	5	10
Brescia	99	3	1	2	11	5	10
AS Roma	100	3	1	2	11	5	10

LEAGUE POSITIONS

Team	P	W	D	L	F	A	Pts
Bayern Munich	1	5	1	0	11	5	16
Werder Bremen	2	4	1	1	11	5	13
Borussia Dortmund	3	3	2	1	11	5	11
Schalke 04	4	3	1	2</

PREMIERSHIP: Arsenal are denied victory by North London rivals while Chelsea continue their goal spree

Spurs frustrate Wright's ambition

ARSENAL 0
TOTTENHAM HOTSPUR 0
By Oliver Holt
Football Correspondent

AT THE end of the long line of Arsenal players running backwards and forwards across the pitch, warming up before the game, Ian Wright stopped and turned to watch the giant screen in one corner of Highbury. At first, he sneaked a couple of glances at the pictures being flashed up and joked with his team-mates about them. Gradually, though, he became enthralled.

It was a highlights video that was being advertised, something that looked like a Life of Ian Wright, with still photos of him as a child, footage of him singing a rap song and of him talking to camera. And then there were the goals: the twisting, turning runs, the delicate chips, right-foot shots, left-foot shots, prods from four yards and headers.

Almost as much time was devoted to the celebrations, the show that Manchester City lose again — 49

Results and tables — 49

Wright has turned into an art-form. In his early Arsenal days, he seemed to favour a leap into the arms of a team-mate. Now, it is more individual, all pumping arms and a little bit of five or imitations of other players. All of it, of course, was set to pounding music.

At the end, the announcer said that the full version of the video would be shown before the first home game after Wright had broken Cliff Bastin's club record of 178 goals. He said that meant it would probably be shown before the game against Bolton Wanderers, the next game, because everyone was assuming that Wright would get the brace he needed against Tottenham Hotspur. Out on the pitch, the spell was broken and the players traipsed off to prepare for the match.

It was supposed to be written in the stars that Wright would break the record on Saturday. His own sense of occasion should have seen to that. Instead, his rush towards Bastin's mark has slowed to an agonising crawl, exacerbated by the excessive reaction to his foolish decision to berate the referee at the end of Arsenal's match with Leicester City last week.

He came close against Spurs, terribly close. He hit the woodwork on the stroke of half-time when Bergkamp, almost inadvertently, slipped a ball through a defender's legs and left Wright with only Walker to beat. His shot hit the crossbar. After the interval, an overhead kick flew straight into Walker's arms and 12 minutes from the final whistle, he was denied by the last of several superb tackles from Campbell, the game's outstanding player.

Wright's run at goal is blocked by Howells, left, and Mabbitt, who ensured that the Arsenal striker failed to break the club's goalscoring record against Tottenham

By the time that the match had finished, though, people were not talking about what was written in the stars but about the disciplinary clouds that were obscuring them, gathering over Highbury. The criticism, fuelled by the events of last week and by another booking each for Wright and Bergkamp on Saturday, has become so vociferous that Arsène Wenger, the Arsenal manager, was moved to liken himself to a "rumormongering protector".

Wenger, who had watched as Sinton limped off with a twisted ankle after Wright's needless tackle from behind, hinted at a future conflict with the Football Association when he stressed Arsenal's desire for Wright's latest misconduct charge to be dealt with soon rather than allowed to drag on for the sake of expediency until after England's game with Italy in Rome on October 11. His main concern, though, was the renewed scrutiny being applied to Arsenal's record of yellow cards. They have had 14 bookings already this season.

"I can take the criticism," Wenger said. "I am here for that. I would rather it came to me than be directed at my players. I have been in the job long enough now to know when it is part of the media game or when it is really true. Maybe we have to try to change something at the club as far as all these bookings go because, in the end, we will pay the price with suspensions."

"I do not want the team to change the way it is playing, but I would like to change some nervous or frustrated individual reactions. That is where we have to improve our behaviour. We are now in a situation where Bergkamp has got a yellow card in three successive games, but I find it strange to think he might soon be suspended and not the defenders who taunt him. They kick him and kick him and kick him and kick him and then the first reaction he gives, he gets booked."

Wenger said that he was pleased with the Arsenal performance, particularly in the first half when they hit the Tottenham woodwork four times. Howells nearly scored an own goal when he deflected Bould's shot on to a post in the eleventh minute and, seven minutes later, Overmars's snap-shot from 20 yards bounced down off the underside of the crossbar.

Ten minutes before the interval, Bergkamp's thunderous free kick was touched on to the crossbar by Walker and then Wright missed his chance as half-time approached. In the second half, with Edinburgh off the field after being sent off for his second bookable offence, Tottenham dragged their remaining ten men behind the ball.

Campbell gave Wright what may be a taste of the future, dominating him completely with his muscular, athletic and assured defending that was as much a joy to watch as all Arsenal's first-half forays forward. And Mabbitt, making the latest in his series of comebacks, marshalled the visitors' defence with aplomb.

"I wish we could do a brain transplant and put Mabbitt's head on a pair of younger legs," Gerry Francis, the Spurs manager, said. Wenger has not yet ventured the same opinion about the mind of Wright.

ARSENAL (4-4-2): D. Seaman — L. Dixon, S. Bould, G. Givens, N. Winterburn — R. Parfitt (sub: N. Anelka, 72min), E. Pelt (sub: D. Platt, 70), P. Velez, M. Overmars — D. Bergkamp, I. Wright.
TOTTENHAM HOTSPUR (4-4-2): I. Walker — S. Carr, J. Scobbie, S. Campbell, J. Edmondson — R. Fox (sub: A. Hatcher, 48), S. Clemens, D. Howie, A. Sinton (sub: J. Dromgouh, 38) — S. Breen (sub: G. Madsen, 45), I. Ferdinand.
Referee: G. Wilson.

Chelsea's flair fails to hide flaws in defence

CHELSEA 4
SOUTHAMPTON 2
By Brian Glanville

SLOPPY is as sloppy does and the word was much in vogue after Chelsea's rollercoaster win over Southampton. Dennis Wise, the inspiration of Chelsea's midfield, thought that "we got a little bit sloppy in the second half". Round Gullit, his manager, felt that "it's important to stay focused for a game, and not to get sloppy".

For his part, David Jones, the Southampton manager, who said that he would rather not have talked at all, said: "Their first goal was a quality goal, the other three were sloppy defending."

All three men were probably right. In the first half, apart from giving away one wholly farcical goal, Chelsea toyed with Southampton. In the second half, they lost the plot, conceded another largely avoidable goal, but pulled themselves together, to Gullit's satisfaction, after Sinclair had been sent off in the 79th minute for allegedly elbowing Williams.

Southampton's defence, in that first half, was a thing of rags and tatters. Chelsea's, even then, never really convinced and was curiously vulnerable to the long ball that Southampton, still waiting for Le Tissier to return from injury, used constantly.

Crude stuff, perhaps, but it worked all too well against Chelsea. Both Southampton goals, in fact, came from such tactics. With Chelsea a goal up by Petrescu after nine minutes — he was allowed to advance and chip the ball in off the post — Le Saux carefully covered a through ball and steered it back to his goalkeeper, De Goeij.

A prostrate Leboeuf is all smiles after his goal on Saturday

De Goeij, already criticised for his errors in the air, now showed himself to be erratic on the ground. True, in a better-ordered world, the dubious law that makes goalkeepers kick out back passes would not exist, but exist it does and goalkeepers are well advised not to dwell on the ball as De Goeij did so dangerously. So Davies, no respecter of fallible Dutch giants, nipped in and swept the ball away from him and into the net.

Southampton's second goal, 15 minutes into the second half, came when, as Gullit admitted, Chelsea's offside trap broke down. Another long boot, this time from Nelson, found, of all people, Southampton's big centre back, Monkou. He brushed off Duberry and shot home off the legs of De Goeij.

Earlier, from yet another long ball, De Goeij, badly exposed by his insouciant defence, did well to thwart the onrushing Ostead, with one large hand. "Overall, of course," Gullit said, "I'm quite happy about the game." Which was perhaps understandable, less so when he described his team as "very very solid".

Certainly in the first half Chelsea made Southampton look inept. Their second goal came on the half-hour from a short corner put over from the left by Zola. Poyet got in a header, Todd blocked on the line, but Leboeuf headed in the rebound.

It was the beginning of five fearful minutes for Southampton. On 33 minutes, Le Saux crossed from the left to the far post, where Mark Hughes headed the third goal. Two minutes later and wizardry by Zola on the right enabled Wise to side-foot the fourth. "We actually passed into the path of Wise," Jones said, with disgust. Ringing the changes once again, Gullit restored Zola to the attack, but was not very pleased with him, eventually substituting him with Vialli, while Flo did not get on.

"We learn more from the second half than from the first," Gullit said. He would have learnt that his attack is vibrant; even in that second half, Poyet hit the bar and Hughes should have scored again. But his defence will hardly do.

Chelsea (4-4-2): E. De Goeij — F. Sinclair, F. Leboeuf, M. Duberry, G. Le Saux — D. Petrescu (sub: S. Carr, 70min), D. Wise, R. D. Melling (sub: M. Nichols, 60), G. Poyet — G. Zola (sub: G. Vialli, 70), M. Hughes.
SOUTHAMPTON (4-4-2): P. Jones — J. Dodd, K. Monkou, F. Burrell, L. Todd — J. Magilton, D. Hughes, N. Madsen (sub: A. Nelson, 55), D. Spence (sub: A. Williams, 70) — K. Davies (sub: M. Evans, 55), E. Ostead.
Referee: A. White.

Oliver Holt
Bolton Wanderers have bounced back into the FA Cup Carling Premiership looking far better equipped to cope with the strains of the top division than they did the last time. Their first game at the Reebok Stadium, though, will still have something of an air of early-season desperation about it for their visitors.

Suddenly, everything seems to be coming together for Colin Todd's team. The signing of Peter Beardsley has added some genuine class to a side that was already looking reasonably assured amid lofty company and the imminent arrival of Mark Fish, the South Africa defender, signed from Lazio for £2 million, will strengthen the team further. Fish is unlikely to play tonight because his work permit has not yet been processed.

Bolton have won, drawn and lost in their opening three games, but they will be favourites to add three points in their new home. The problem, though, Howard Kendall's side look lightweight in midfield — where Danny Williamson has added a little vibrancy but hardly the focus they need — and sometimes painfully slow at the back, although Slaven Bilic is playing with the class that Evertonians appreciate.

Kendall has had one piece of good news in the recovery of Andy Hinchcliffe, who has not played since December after suffering a cruciate injury. He came through his second match in four days for the A team on Saturday.

Bolton were on the wrong end of a Barnsley backlash from their 6-0 defeat at home to Chelsea in their last match, but they should be too strong for Everton tonight. BOLTON WANDERERS (4-4-2): K. Bangsjon — J. Phillips, G. Taggart, G. Beardsley, R. Elliott — P. Beardsley, A. Thompson, J. Pollock, S. Sallors — N. Blake, P. Beardsley.

EVERTON (4-4-2): N. Southall — T. Thomas, D. Webster, S. Dale, Y. Preston — R. Stuart, S. Williamson, G. Forsyth, G. Speed — D. Ferguson, N. Barry.

TELEVISION: Today: Live on Sky Sports, 8pm.
PREDICTION: Bolton to win by one goal.

BOLTON WANDERERS
v EVERTON
Tonight, 8.0

Everton have only managed three points from their first three games and looked so utterly outclassed against a below-par Manchester United at Goodison Park on Wednesday night that they are rumoured to have re-entered negotiations for Fabrizio Ravanelli, Middlesbrough's unsettled Italy striker.

Their forward line, where Duncan Ferguson desperately needs a goal for his aerial presence and where neither Nick Barry nor Grahan Stuart are showing much sign of providing it, is only part of the problem, though. Howard Kendall's side look lightweight in midfield — where Danny Williamson has added a little vibrancy but hardly the focus they need — and sometimes painfully slow at the back, although Slaven Bilic is playing with the class that Evertonians appreciate.

Kendall has had one piece of good news in the recovery of Andy Hinchcliffe, who has not played since December after suffering a cruciate injury. He came through his second match in four days for the A team on Saturday.

Bolton were on the wrong end of a Barnsley backlash from their 6-0 defeat at home to Chelsea in their last match, but they should be too strong for Everton tonight.

BOLTON WANDERERS (4-4-2): K. Bangsjon — J. Phillips, G. Taggart, G. Beardsley, R. Elliott — P. Beardsley, A. Thompson, J. Pollock, S. Sallors — N. Blake, P. Beardsley.

EVERTON (4-4-2): N. Southall — T. Thomas, D. Webster, S. Dale, Y. Preston — R. Stuart, S. Williamson, G. Forsyth, G. Speed — D. Ferguson, N. Barry.

TELEVISION: Today: Live on Sky Sports, 8pm.
PREDICTION: Bolton to win by one goal.

Victory proves feast enough for Villa

ASTON VILLA 1
LEEDS UNITED 0
By Richard Hobson

just three days ahead of the Uefa Cup first round, first-leg tie in Bordeaux. Imagine how uncertainty would have grown through the idle days ahead had Villa remained bottom.

They were nervous enough on Saturday. When Leeds attacked for the first time, Southgate, acting captain after the transfer of Townsend, directed each of two attempts to clear closer to peril. Staunton and Ehiogu all but clashed heads rushing to the subsequent loose ball. How fortunate they were that Ribeiro failed to capitalise and, indeed, that Hopkin volleyed over from 16 yards after Wallace took advantage of a mistake by Charles. Charles missed last season because of an ankle problem and endured a torrid first half. George Graham, the Leeds manager, described the level of defending by both sides as very poor, a criticism that he feels is valid of the Premiership in general this season. This does not appear to say much for the respective attacks in a one-goal game. Yet the goalkeepers deserve more praise than the strikers warrant chastisement.

Trying to penetrate any side of Graham's must seem like gnawing through gristle, but Villa persevered. Martyn parried from Staunton in the second minute and then prevented Grayson from giving a surging run the finish it deserved. Collymore placed a free header wide of the far post shortly before the interval, but drew the finest of Martyn's saves when he found his bearings on the hour.

Bosnich, too, reacted swiftly to deal with Ribeiro, who had jinked around Southgate and Ehiogu. The best opportunity for Leeds, though, fell to Kewell, 18, the Australia international, who tarnished a creative performance along the left by shooting into the side-netting with Villa caught square.

ASTON VILLA (4-4-2): M. Bosnich — G. Southgate, S. Staunton, U. Ehiogu — G. Charles (sub: F. Nelson, 45min), J. Taylor, M. Dwyer, S. Grayson, A. Wright — D. Collymore, S. Collymore.

LEEDS UNITED (4-4-1-1): N. Martyn — G. Kelly, D. Whelan, L. Radebe, D. Robertson — R. Wicks, S. Savage, D. Hopkin (sub: G. Halls, 75), A. Hinchcliffe, H. Kewell — J. F. Henshaw (sub: G. Liley, 70).
Referee: P. Jones.

Wednesday find their rhythm as Carbone strikes

SHEFFIELD WEDNESDAY 1
LEICESTER CITY 0
By Mark Hodgkinson

TWO large clocks at Hillsborough enable supporters to know precisely how much more football they have to endure or enjoy at any given moment. Sheffield Wednesday and Leicester City met on Saturday after playing in midweek games that had proffered 15 goals. This was the comedown, the revenge of the mundane. On both clocks and on every watch in the ground, time dragged — slowly, laboriously — and the midweek drama seemed like a myth by which we had been foolishly enticed.

David Pleat, the Wednesday manager, seems happy that his side has settled again after the 7-2 defeat at Blackburn. "We were looking for some shape today and it was important we came away with a result."

The first half was particularly barren with only one dash of passion, though this was suitably ridiculous. Paolo Di Canio miscontrolled a pass and it appeared to roll into touch. The referee gave a throw-in, while Di Canio gave a soliloquy to remember. Feet stamping, arms waving, he berated the referee's assistant until the referee, quite rightly, halted the petulance with a booking.

"I am really worried," Pleat said. "There is retribution and there are gestures. There is a big difference. He didn't call the referee a name, it was nothing dramatic."

It was dramatic, the kind of drama one finds at a children's party when the jelly and ice-cream supplies have run low and someone suggests small portions all round. The comedy of Di Canio's outburst was accentuated by his brilliant white boots. He looked as if he had stepped in a tin of paint on his way from the dressing-room and padded about the pitch with a strangely effeminate waltz. It was as if, at any minute, his boots were going to float skywards and take him with them.

The main feature remained insufferably dull, but at least some of the subplots were moderately absorbing. Des Walker, generally out-thought Heskley while Izet and Lennon were industrious and precise than Wednesday's leaden midfield. Another duel, Elliott against Carbone, supplied the game's only goal. Carbone was about to summon some more of his fleet-foot tricks when the raw-boned defender, carelessly forced him to the ground. The referee awarded a penalty and the Italian scored. "From where I was, it looked like he had lost balance. It looked harsh, but I might be proved wrong," Martin O'Neill, the Leicester City manager, said.

In truth, it was an incident without malice, the kind of lazy, thoughtless challenge that deserved to settle the game. Wednesday at last found some rhythm after scoring and both Hirst and Whittingham had good chances well saved by Keller.

Finally, by the referee's watch, it was time to finish and all the other bearers of watches left to hear tales of relative daring and adventure from those who had shown the good sense to go shopping or tile the bathroom wall. All we had to offer in return was a preposterous tale about a dark-haired man in white boots.

SHEFFIELD WEDNESDAY (4-4-2): K. Pressman — J. Nolan (sub: L. Ribeiro, 60min), J. Newson, D. Walker, S. Wood — P. Di Canio, D. Hirst, S. Whittingham, R. Heskley (sub: G. Collins, 18), P. Althorpe, R. Humphreys (sub: G. Whitham, 70) — S. Carbone, D. Hest.

LEICESTER CITY (4-5-1): K. Walters — S. Hirst (sub: A. Collins, 50), M. Elliott, S. Walsh — P. Keane, R. Savage (sub: G. Poyet, 62), N. Lennon, M. Izet, S. Grayson — J. F. Henshaw (sub: G. Panton, 62), E. Hestley.
Referee: P. Abbott.

Meanwhile at the top Blackburn and Manchester United keep on winning — and a young defender catches the eye

Rovers fill in details of challenge

IT WAS, on the face of it, a remarkable statement. As Blackburn Rovers settled into their seats on the bus for the long journey home, Tim Flowers ignored the shrill cries of the autograph-hunters craning their necks behind him and said: "The chances of us winning the title? I wouldn't even talk about it because there would be eight teams laughing at us. To be honest, I think there are eight teams potentially better than us."

Eight? Well, let's see, Manchester United, Liverpool, Arsenal, Chelsea, Newcastle United, that's an arguable five. But eight? Aston Villa? Not on the evidence of the season so far. Leeds United? No. West Ham United? Tottenham Hotspur? Everton? No, no and no. If Flowers was trying to play down Blackburn's chances of winning the league that they annexed so expensively in 1995, then he was trying too hard. Blackburn are not going to finish as low as ninth, of that you can be absolutely certain.

Look at the league table, not at Blackburn's name at the top of the FA Carling Premiership, nor at the figure in the points column (although 13 garnered from five games is impressive enough). It is the number of goals scored and conceded that stand out — 15 for, four against. Only Chelsea compare, but they have yet to meet any of the fancied runners, say Liverpool or Villa.

Look at the demolition last Monday of Sheffield Wednesday, challengers for a place in Europe last season, fresh from a solid draw with Wimbledon and with some of their number promising, beforehand at least, a repeat performance this time around. It was festive stuff, strutting, arrogant, marvellous.

And look at the evidence on Saturday. Yes, Blackburn were a class apart from Palace, yes, they were assured and confident where their hosts were merely energetic and erratic, but there was more than that. Blackburn betrayed an attention to detail that bears the hallmark of Roy Hodgson, their manager, and that will serve them well all season long. A good example — a fitness expert, Arnaldo Longaretti, brought in from Piacenza, conducted their warm-up before the kick-off, a muscular cross between a line-dancing routine and an aerobics class, while Hodgson, who might have busied himself elsewhere, stood and watched, very closely, from the sidelines. Attention to

CRYSTAL PALACE 1
BLACKBURN ROVERS 2
By Peter Robinson

detail, nothing left to chance.

It would be stretching a point to say Palace were beaten there and then, but they did not have to wait long. A harmless-looking ball from Ripley, a mistimed jump from Edworthy and Sutton pounced, driving home from 20 yards with barely a break in his stride. A professional, clinical finish, Sutton's sixth of the season, and Palace were done for after little more than 22 minutes. Gallacher made it 2-0 shortly afterwards, finishing a smooth move of first-touch passes that ended with Edworthy and Miller, the Palace goalkeeper, in a heap on the floor and the little Scot rolling the ball over the line.

So Palace trudged off at half-time knowing they had got it wrong, having — as Steve Coppell, their manager, later admitted — tried to shackle Ripley and forgotten about everybody else. In the dressing-room, they were greeted by a proverbial plate of red meat instead of tea and re-emerged ready for a scrap. Lombardo, peripheral anyway, was given a supporting role, Dyer taking the lead, his brawn replacing the Italian's brain. The young striker pulled a goal back shortly after the restart, too, beating Flowers to a classic example of a route one long ball, but neither he nor Palace threatened an equaliser with any conviction.

Dyer did give Colin Hendry a memorable afternoon's wrestling, it has to be said, or rather he would have done if Hendry had not been knocked silly on the hour, first by an errant elbow, then by Flowers flying through him from behind, then by a heavy fall all in one, sickening moment. As he lay motionless on the pitch for eight minutes, surrounded by physios, club doctors and a confused St John Ambulance crew, it appeared as if he was seriously hurt and that Blackburn had lost what Flowers called the "central figure of the whole team, the mainstay" for a long spell. Totems, though, are made of stronger stuff and although he was unconscious for at least 2½ minutes and was wheeled off to hospital in a neck brace, Hendry went home with the rest of the Blackburn party and was pleading yesterday to be included in the Scotland team to face Belarus at the weekend.

Dyer outjumps Valery, but the Blackburn defender had the last word during an impressive away win

Some people are just suckers for punishment, but sometimes it makes sense to save them from themselves. Concussion is a head injury — Hendry said later that he could remember nothing of the incident — and a rest would probably serve him better.

Unsettled, Blackburn lost a little of their control, but not enough for Palace to snatch a point. The chances came at the other end, Sutton missing one after another, converting another only for an offside flag, unlikely, to deny him. No goals, then, not even in the 10½ minutes of stoppage time that the referee accurately allowed. Quite what Leicester City and Arsenal would have made of that is anybody's guess — 5-3, 6-6 — but Blackburn were content to play keep-ball near the corner flag and Palace were pretty much powerless to stop them.

"Blackburn were very, very solid," an admiring Coppell said afterwards. "There is an awful lot of firepower in their team. For their first goal, Edworthy, our best player so far this season, was caught and it was a great finish. We might have got away with it in the first division." There was no chance of that happening on Saturday.

CRYSTAL PALACE (1-2-3-2) M. Miller — N. Edworthy — D. Tully (sub N. Sheehy, 30m), A. Longford (sub M. Henderson, 90) — K. Muscat (sub N. England, 75), A. Lombardo, A. Roberts, S. Rodgers, D. Gordon — D. Dyer, P. Williams. BLACKBURN ROVERS (4-4-2) T. Flowers — P. Valery, S. Hendry, C. Hendry (sub I. Pearce, 80), J. Sutton — S. Ripley, G. Mitchell, L. Bolton, K. Gallacher — G. Sutton, M. Dutton (sub, A. Anderson, 80). Referee: P. Burge.

Ferguson has remedy for complacency

MANCHESTER UNITED 3
COVENTRY CITY 0
By David Maddock

THERE is a tributary road at Old Trafford that ushers car-park traffic away from the stadium. On match days it is, to those in the know, a place to avoid even long after the final whistle.

Forgetting such advice is not a good idea, unless your idea of fun is sitting bumper to bumper in a bluing concoction of fumes and fuming. Yet it does offer some insight into today's Manchester United supporters. He or she is leaving late — in a Range Rover or a BMW — after enjoying lengthy post-match hospitality.

These are the champagne supporters, entitled to Old Trafford by the seductive glimmer of silverware. They are the good-time charlies who know only United's dominance of the 1990s, know only victory, only trophies, and they have come to expect it as their right.

In his programme notes, Alex Ferguson, the United manager, addressed this all-pervasive feeling of superiority that hangs in the air at Old Trafford. "Manchester United are up there on a pedestal these days, it is our rightful position after dominating the championship in recent seasons," he said. Yet, after this apparently straightforward victory over Coventry City, there was more than a hint of regret edging into a voice that already betrayed a rare uncertainty.

The problem with pedestals is that they are high enough to fall from. United may have won comfortably enough, but it was an uncomfortable afternoon for Ferguson as he witnessed signs of complacency in his side. Such an attitude is anathema to the United manager. He was raised in the shipyards of Glasgow and, to him, every day is a fight, every match a showdown. There can be no room for this idea of invincibility.

Of course, he does not mind the fans thinking that way, but when his players betray a similar sentiment, then the eyes narrow and his face reddens. "We played like a team who felt we could win if we wanted to," he said. "We have had that problem for some time against certain teams and it is not good enough. We are a better team when we show a hunger and determination to get at the game and we didn't do that."

The problem for United is that expectation has become a heavy burden. They cannot afford to under-perform, particularly in the big contests. Inevitably, matches against the likes of Coventry do not possess such a sense of importance and that feeling, generated by the crowd, was clearly transmitted to the players on Saturday.

Ferguson though, bristling with a repressed anger, has in his mind an antidote. "We have a problem with matches like these. Maybe I will have to change my personnel."

It was not a threat to bring in new signings, but the option of reshuffling his loaded pack to bring in those reserves who have the desire, but few opportunities. United are unbeaten this season and, on Saturday, created a club record of five consecutive league matches without conceding a goal. Ferguson may have a point, though. After an opening goal, rather fortunately crafted when Cole's shot, after 70 seconds, was deflected up and over Ogilvie, the Coventry goalkeeper, United lost the plot somewhat.

As Gordon Strachan, the Coventry manager, said: "I think the score flatters United. I am very, very happy with my team because everyone played well. You would only call United solid if you call off the line a couple of times and hitting the woodwork solid."

Coventry were unfortunate. Dublin, a United old boy, hit the post with one spectacular overhead kick and should have done far better with a free header from close range. United, in fairness, looked as if they had the capacity to step up a gear if required.

The scoreline was given a gloss that the game did not warrant in the 72nd minute, when a corner by Beckham somehow reached Keane and the ball bounced off the captain's knees to creep into the net. Poborsky, the substitute, added to the injustice with a well-taken goal a minute from time. Ferguson knows, however, that while such a result under such circumstances is ominous for the rest of the FA Carling Premiership, it will do little to un-nervous those observers from Juventus and Feyenoord, who were at the game on Saturday.

MANCHESTER UNITED (4-4-2) S. Schuster — G. Neville, S. Palmer, H. Bagg, P. Neville (sub D. Ince, 60m) — D. Beckham, N. Butt, R. Keane, S. Potts, C. Cole (sub K. Pootersky, 85), E. Sheehy. COVENTRY CITY (4-5-1) S. Ogilvie — R. Nelson, R. Shaw, P. Williams, D. Barnes, D. Hargreave, P. Taylor, A. Richardson, M. Hall, J. Salako — D. Dublin. Referee: G. Aubrey.

Barnsley delight in pointless exercise

THE lessons are coming hard and fast for Barnsley, and practice is not making them any easier to absorb. A 6-0 home defeat by Chelsea may have hurt their pride, but this was far more painful — defeat in a game they might easily have drawn and conceivably should have won.

There is an innocence about Barnsley's style that borders on naivety, an attractiveness that may also prove their Achilles' heel. Six points from five games is hardly the stuff of FA Carling Premiership nightmares, but having played their way out of the first division there is a suspicion that because of Danny Wilson's purist tendencies Barnsley will play their way back into it.

The pattern of this game was set early on and never wavered. Derby County have enough players of their own who like to caress the ball, but, when needs must, they can lump it with the worst of them; when Barnsley could not play the ball short and to feet, it seemed that they did not know what to do with it at all.

Then, when the focus switched from the cerebral to the physical, it was no contest. Barnsley had barely conceded a free kick before the names of Eranio, Dailly and Laursen, of Derby, were in Paul Durkin's book, and Barnard, the visiting wing back, was being wheeled away on a stretcher — "knocked doolally" Wilson said — after Laursen's fearsome challenge.

So it went on until, with Durkin checking his watch and Derby clinging ever more nervously to Eranio's first-half penalty, Lars Leese, the Barnsley goalkeeper, gathered the ball, looked upfield and rolled it to a defender for one last intricate, patient build-up: doomed, like all its predecessors, to failure.

Is Wilson, understandably reluctant to sanction a wholesale restructuring of his team's methods, prepared to compromise? The answer was emphatic and, it should be said, there is not yet the slightest sign of discontent among those who fill an expectant Oakwell or who on Saturday outsang Derby in their attractive and atmospheric new Pride Park home.

"The one thing we won't do is start whacking it," Wilson said. "It was important today that we tried to play our way through them. It is the only way we can play. We haven't got the players to hit the ball long. I like to watch the way we play and that is the way we will continue."

DERBY COUNTY 1
BARNLEY 0
By Keith Pike

What Wilson does acknowledge is his need to recruit a goalscorer. "We need to score goals to stay in this division and we have only got four, which isn't good enough," he said. "That is the harsh reality of the Premiership. My four strikers haven't got a goal between them."

The point was underlined by Liddell's three second-half misses and Redfern's two. Iain Dowie, seemingly surplus to West Ham United's requirements, remains high on Wilson's wanted list.

Like Barnsley, Derby doubtless would settle for finishing the season with four teams below them, as there are at present, and they will be much stronger with the return of Asanovic and Sturridge to full fitness.

Baiano's debut was promising, no more, but he did feature prominently in the decisive moment, drawing the foul from Leese that won the penalty and, having seen his spot-kick saved, stepping aside for Eranio to convert a retake.

ordered because the goalkeeper had strayed off forward rather than merely along his line. Baiano and Van der Laan also missed glaring opportunities: like Wilson, Jim Smith knows that he cannot afford such generosity.

DERBY COUNTY (3-1-4-2) M. Poom — C. Dailly, I. Smith, P. Redfern, J. Laursen — S. Potts, S. Potts (sub G. Rownt, 53), R. van der Laan, J. Hume, C. Powell — F. Baiano (sub D. Sturridge, 77), A. Ward. BARNLEY (3-4-1-2) L. Leese — A. Moses, M. Asanovic, A. De Zeeuw — N. Eaden, E. Trivett, R. Redfern, D. Barnard (sub D. Shepherd, 34), J. Marcell, (sub J. Hendrie, 57) — G. Wilson (sub, P. Wilkinson, 63), A. Liddell. Referee: P. Dunne.

Redknapp's humour faces a stringent test

WEST HAM UNITED 3
WIMBLEDON 1
By Russell Kempson

AUGUST is a friendly month in football: a month of expectation, bedding in and a long leash from the chairman. A time for settling the summer signings, for spotting strengths and identifying weaknesses.

September is different altogether: a month of sideways glances, of best-laid plans crumbling and creeping discontent. A time of fading hopes, creaking promises and the first glimpses of disenchantment: a time, perhaps, for firing and hiring.

West Ham United and Wimbledon thus bade farewell to August at Upton Park on Saturday. West Ham, in third place in the FA Carling Premiership, with fond memories: Wimbledon, plump last, with a gruff good-riddance.

At such a delicate stage of the season, however, the owners can be misleading. West Ham, it would appear, are placed nicely to challenge for the title. Wimbledon appear to be destined for doom and gloom.

Not so, West Ham have accumulated ten points from matches against Barnsley, Tottenham Hotspur, Everton, Coventry City and Wimbledon — hardly the most taxing of opening schedules. Wimbledon have taken two points against Liverpool, Sheffield Wednesday, Chelsea and West Ham (their midweek tussle with Derby County was abandoned when the floodlights failed).

This month, reality beckons. Wimbledon meet Newcastle United, Crystal Palace, Barnsley and Tottenham while West Ham face Manchester United, Newcastle, Arsenal and Liverpool. It is entirely conceivable that, come October, these two sides' positions in the league will be reversed.

"I'm glad we've got a few points before September," Harry Redknapp, the West Ham manager, said. "I suppose some people would look at it as black September. It will be a very big test for us." Redknapp frequently masks his innermost fears with joviality, an endearing trait. He will probably need every ounce of humour as the Premiership campaign kicks in with a vengeance.

West Ham, though, were good, too good for a Wimbledon line-up that lacked the guile of Leonhardsen, now at Liverpool, and the tenacity and leadership of Jones, now injured. Not so much in the first half, when the offside flags resembled a semaphore convention and consistently interrupted the flow, but more so thereafter.

In the space of seven minutes, soon after the interval, it was all over bar the shouting. Harrison drilled in a sweet 25-yarder, Ripper glanced in a header from Berkovic's free kick and then Berkovic

Ferdinand: precocious talent

galloped away to convert Brackley's incisive pass. Ekoku's eighth-minute goal was an irrelevance.

Joe Kinnear, the Wimbledon manager, maintained a defiant stance. "We lost our first three games of last season," he said, "and we didn't do too bad in the end. Our current position doesn't tell all the truths. We should have at least five points had we taken all our opportunities."

Opportunities, chances. Had they been accepted, West Ham could be leading the Premiership and Wimbledon could lie in mid-table. Yet it is no more than a masquerade, a preliminary skirmish in the overall ball game.

Redknapp is not fooled. "I remember when I was in Bermuda on holiday during the summer," he said. "I was sitting round the pool, with my missus, and I read about the tanning of who would be the first Premiership manager to get the sack. If Redknapp can survive September, the bookies said..."

"I tell you what, I will survive September. That's for sure."

WEST HAM UNITED (4-3-1-2) L. Maddiso — T. Brackley, M. Ripper, R. Ferdinand, D. Unsworth — S. Lomas, J. Morrison, S. Lomas — E. Brackley — D. Dowie, J. Harrison. WIMBLEDON (4-1-3-2) N. Sullivan — D. Jupp, C. Perry, D. Brackley, S. Richardson (sub A. Carr, 75m) — A. Cunningham — N. Ardley, R. Earle, A. Kinnear — D. Hargreave (sub E. Ekoku, 80), J. Eust (sub M. Garry, 80). Referee: G. Pail.

Ferdinand's finesse forces faithful to wait and wonder

Simon Barnes on whether a teenage prodigy can shoulder the burden of expectation at the West Ham football academy

A footballing centre half is usually a big bloke who likes to fanny about on the ball and then gets caught out in some mad foray upfield. The point with Ferdinand is that there are no frills to his game. He eschews the easy back pass and turns the forward neatly to lay a ball into midfield, but there is nothing self-indulgent about it.

Watching him play is an astonishing, rather disquieting experience. There is something almost freakish about his calm, his understanding. Naturally, people have been coming forward to say good things about him. "Immense skill," Roger Cross, the assistant manager of Tottenham Hotspur, added after a game earlier this season. "Many people rate him the best young player in the country. I go farther and say he's the best in the world."

Inevitably, he being a West Ham player, people compare him to Bobby Moore. There is, indeed, something of Moore's air of detachment, almost of condescension, a grown-up calmly sorting things out in a kids' game. That bland insouciance makes it seem that he can bear any load of responsibility and worry: even the responsibility and worry that go with so vast a burden of expectation.

It is hard to assess a young player correctly. We spoil the clarity of vision with an excess of hope. It is the same in the parade ring before a very big race. We really want to be about to witness the emergence of the greatest racehorse that ever drew breath.

And so we fancy that the potential champion strides better than anything we have ever seen: he fills the eye as no horse has done before. Come the test, come the disappointment. Usually — but not always.

Ferdinand fills the eye all right. The great thing about watching Steve Davis playing snooker at his peak was that he seemed never to have a difficult shot to make. This was because his preparation in previous shots was always coolly perfect. Ferdinand has some of that same unflustered air, the same understanding of position.

The astonishing thing is the ease with which he has stepped across the gulf from reserve-team football to the FA Carling Premiership. It was no trouble at all to him. In American football, the rookie quarterback, slammed on to his back, is told: "Welcome to Pro Ball." In this country, the teenage footballer, subtly dealt with off the ball, hears: "Different game. Innit, son?" But it is all one to Ferdinand.

Serene, untroubled, he recalls, to hope-fingered eyes, the casual strolling of Franz Beckenbauer. But the enemies of promise are legion. Which of us is the same at 21 as at 18? Hard enough for anybody, that small but significant chasm of years, but for a footballer it is twice as difficult. Minds and cruciate ligaments are delicate things.

We have all watched a wonderful two-year-old horse and asked a great question. Yes, but will he train on? Of course, the only way of knowing is waiting. Ferdinand must beware the Bill Truscott syndrome, the Anthony Powell character, who was either going to be Poet Laureate or the next prime minister but three. In the end, he gets very interested in the by-products of coal and joins the Coal Board.

Sport has its own patterns of hope and disappointment and we have all learnt how to recognise them. Fact: not all those who find the early going easy go on to great things and not all those who struggle initially are doomed to wasted lives. Another fact: no one who likes football can watch Ferdinand without purring. Promise is a dangerous and lovely thing.

Williams reaches US Open quarter-finals as young Croatian takes Novotna to three sets

Precocious Lucic leaves an indelible impression

FROM DAVID POWELL IN NEW YORK

ANNA KOURNIKOVA is out, so too is Mirjana Lucic, the latest young thing in tennis, but the United States Open women's singles here at Flushing Meadows is not yet back in the hands of the grown-ups entirely. Martina Hingis, the No 1 seed, who this summer became the youngest Wimbledon singles champion this century, has reached the third round without dropping a set and yesterday, Venus Williams, 17, became the first player into the quarter-finals.

Having disposed of Anke Huber, the No 8 seed, in the third round, Williams eliminated another player ranked above her 66th own position in the world. Joannette Kruger, from South Africa, was despatched without fuss, 6-2, 6-3, as Williams continued to succeed where she had failed so miserably, with a first-round defeat, at Wimbledon.

Brad Gilbert, Andre Agassi's coach, wants to coach Williams, saying that she is not "as polished" as Hingis or Kournikova. He left a message on the telephone answering machine of Williams's father-coach suggesting he hand her over, but the call, apparently, was not returned. The spit, without the polish, will do for here.

Lucic went out to Jana Novotna, having taken the runner-up to Hingis at Wimbledon to a deciding set after trailing by a set and 4-1. "I should have won. I had the match in my hands," Lucic said in frustration.

John Newcombe, three times the Wimbledon men's singles champion, whose rugged game was built on a strong serve and forceful volleying, opined that Lucic would take the women's game "into another dimension and force other girls to hit the ball a little bit harder." Iva Majoli, a Croatian compatriot, rates Lucic more highly than Williams.

"I think she is a better player than Venus," Majoli said. "She is more consistent. She has almost everything you need for the game of power," John Barrett, the BBC television tennis commentator, observed that Lucic had "no weaknesses" and Novotna described Lucic's game as "the modern way to play tennis".

Novotna was made to sweat to the extent that, between the second and third sets, she went off court to change her clothes. "She is a hard hitter and plays everything on the baseline," Novotna said. "Her best part is probably her return and she loves to have a target."

Having watched Lucic for the first time in her second round demolition of Aubrie Rippner, Novotna recognised that she would need to vary her game. "I went into the match knowing that if I had served and volleyed, she would get used to it and probably beat me," Novotna said. "I knew I would have to mix it up." The Czech's backhand slice proved a significant spoiler.

Though slightly taller than Steffi Graf, there is an inescapable resemblance physically between Lucic and the winner of 21 grand slam singles titles, especially in the facial features, the mouth and nose. If her game is maturing more quickly than her years, so too is her appearance.

Kournikova, who reached the Wimbledon semi-finals, aged 16, had expressed her disapproval that Lucic had been allowed into the draw. Kournikova's view was that it was against the spirit of the rules governing age, and Wimbledon and the French Open had declined to let her in. However, grand slam tournaments can make their own decisions. "I am very happy that I can play, even though I should not," Lucic said.

Mirjana Lucic, the unseeded 15-year-old from Croatia, serves during her third-round defeat by Jana Novotna

The youngest player in the tournament, Lucic looks 19, perhaps 20. "She does not look like a 15-year-old and she does not handle things on court like a 15-year-old," Hingis, all of 16, said.

Already Lucic has delivered some stinging returns to the media. "Can you win this tournament?" she was asked at her first press conference here. "That is a very strange question. I have to say," came the reply, in her perfect English, learned at school in Croatia. In a television interview she was asked if she thought she was too young to be playing grand slam tennis: that, she let him know, was a strange question, too.

The tan, the blue eyes, the ponytail kept in place with blue and white ribbons. She may not be quite as eye-catching as Kournikova — who is? — but she will have the marketing men working up a saliva.

TV Action Replay, page 47

Rusedski serves up chance of last-eight place

FROM DAVID POWELL

THE partisan British crowd was not there, but the broad smile and bandana were and so, most definitely, was the service. Greg Rusedski won his third match of the United States Open at Flushing Meadows without dropping a set on Saturday. Now he has an outstanding chance of progressing into the quarter-finals today, when he is due to meet the unseeded Daniel Vacek, from the Czech Republic.

Rusedski did not have so much as a break point against him as he defeated Jens Knippschild, from Germany, 7-5, 6-3, 6-1. He served 14 aces, including two at 141mph, beating his previous quickest of 139mph. Providing that Rusedski does not suffer a sudden loss of form of the kind that saw him capitulate against Cedric Pioline in the quarter-finals at Wimbledon, Vacek should not be a match for him.

Vacek has reached the fourth round after defeating two qualifiers and Mark Philippoussis, the No 14 seed. His victory over Philippoussis is not as impressive as it may appear: the Australian's recent form has been poor.

Before coming here, Vacek had failed to win more than two matches in any of his 15 tournaments since reaching the Rotterdam final in March. Ten of his defeats came in the first round. In the Rotterdam semi-finals, he put out Goran Ivanisevic, which, like his victory over Philippoussis, should not be overstated. The big-hitting Croatian's form has been erratic this summer.

Vacek did not win a set in any of the first three grand-slam tournaments of the year, although Tim Henman had to work hard to beat him in the deciding set in the New Haven tournament three weeks ago. However, if Rusedski can complement his powerful service with the range of forehand passes and top-spin winners off his weaker backhand side that he has displayed in earlier rounds, a quarter-final place should be his. Henman, incidentally, is expected to miss the tournament in Bournemouth next week, seeking instead a wild card to compete in Tashkent.

With three seeds — Ivanisevic, Philippoussis and Alex Corretja, from Spain — cleared from his quarter of the draw, Rusedski would play either Felix Mantilla, the No 12 seed, from Spain, or Richard Krajicek, the unseeded 1996 Wimbledon champion, from Holland, in the last eight. Spectators would no doubt prefer Mantilla to progress because Krajicek versus Rusedski would be a match of short rallies.

Rusedski's match on Saturday was largely tedious. The applause seemed to become quieter with every game, the initial appreciation of Rusedski's stunning services giving way to frustration at the paucity of rallies. Occasionally, the Briton would bring out something from the back of his cupboard. "If people just talk about my serve, they are missing out on my returns and my ground shots, so I will surprise them a few times," he said.

Results 41

Krajicek progressed without playing after Corretja had withdrawn through injury. The Dutchman said that he regarded the walkover as an opportunity lost to raise his confidence. "I have not beaten too many high-ranked players in the last couple of months," he said.

John McEnroe watched Jonas Bjorkman, from Sweden, eliminate Gustavo Kuerten, the No 9 seed and French Open champion, in straight sets and described his backhand return as "a thing of beauty". Kuerten's defeat was a harsh blow for Brazilian sport. A supporter being interviewed for television during the match said he was as popular as any soccer player in Brazil right now.

EQUESTRIANISM

Beerbaum proves faultless

FROM JENNY MACARTHUR IN MANNHEIM

LUDDER BEERBAUM, of Germany, the 1992 Olympic champion, produced ecstatic scenes at the European showjumping championships here yesterday when he and Sprehe Ratina, aged 15, won the individual gold medal after completing the three days of competition without incurring any faults.

His faultless performance in yesterday's two-part final — which followed the team gold medal he won on Friday — brought the 20,000-strong crowd to its feet. As Beerbaum, 34, crossed the finish line, he hurled his cap in the air and then flung his arms around the neck of his Hanoverian mare.

The winner of an Olympic team gold and an individual silver medal with her previous rider, Piet Reymakers, Sprehe Ratina's record with Beerbaum sets her among the all-time greats of the sport. In 1993, they won the World Cup; the following year, they gained team gold at the world championships; and, in Atlanta last summer, she won a second Olympic team gold, but had to be withdrawn from the individual contest after injuring a hind leg.

Yesterday, she was never even close to making a mistake. Hugo Simon, of Austria, on his dual World Cup-winner, ET, had shadowed Beerbaum throughout the competition, but, unable to compensate for his four faults in the opening speed leg, had to settle for the individual silver medal. Willi Melliger, of Switzerland, the 1993 European champion and Olympic individual silver medal-winner, took the bronzes on Calvaro for the second successive occasion.

Britain's best performance came from Geoff Billington on It's Otto, who finished tenth. Robert Smith, whose stylish riding has been a feature of these championships, dropped from eighth to twelfth after Senator Tees Hanauer, 17, faulted at fence ten, an airy white upright.

The Whitaker brothers, usually the mainstays of the team, both dropped out of contention. Michael, winner of the individual silver medal in 1995, withdrew, deciding that his young horse, Ashley, on whom he was in twentieth place, had done enough. John Whitaker and Welham, thirteenth overnight, withdrew before the second round after Welham faulted at the water — an influential fence in the first round — and then, in a repeat of his mistake in Friday's Nations' Cup contest, refused at the combination.

The first three places — filled by Beerbaum, Simon and Emile Hendrix, of Holland — remained unchanged after the first round. In the final round, in which riders again went in reverse order of merit, Hendrix had eight faults and dropped to ninth place. Simon, 55, gained a second clear round which meant that Beerbaum could only afford one fence down. As the crowd held its breath, the cool-headed German jumped boldly round the ten-fence course to produce his fifth successive clear round of the championships.

However, the result was subject to confirmation, after an inquiry by the International Equestrian Federation last night into a possible breach of rules by Simon.

RESULTS: 1 Sprehe Ratina & Beerbaum, Ger; 2 ET (H Simon, Aust); 3 Calvaro (W Melliger, Swi); 12-20, British pairings: 10, It's Otto (G Billington, 17.75); 12, Senator Tees Hanauer (R Smith, 22.87); 18, Velvet Village Welham (J Whitaker, 22.00); 20, Velvet Village Ashley (J Whitaker).

SQUASH

Jansher not interested, says Power

FROM COLIN MCQUILLAN IN HONG KONG

GREAT Britain's interest in the Cathay Pacific Hong Kong Open ended when Peter Nicol fell to a superb attacking semi-final performance from Jonathon Power, of Canada, on Saturday.

The 24-year-old Scot saw it merely as a disappointing start to the season after a two-month training break. Jansher Khan, the world champion, who went on to defeat Power 14-15, 15-12, 15-2, in the 65-minute final yesterday, saw it more as confirmation that he could continue to lead the game as long as he cared.

This Hong Kong title was Jansher's eighth and his 82nd big victory in the PSA World Tour and he said: "I will have bad days and people will beat me here and there, but before they can claim to be approaching the No 1 spot, they have to beat me three, four, or five times."

Results, page 41

RUGBY LEAGUE

Oldham gain some solace

OLDHAM Bears ended their traumatic Super League season with a victory, even if it did come too late to preserve their top-flight status. Tries by Howard Hill, Paul Davidson and Ian Russell, plus four goals by Francis Maloney were enough to give the home supporters some solace after a miserable season.

Warrington were hardly in contention in the first half when Oldham, showing far more commitment than on some occasions this season, adapted better to the driving rain and slippery conditions.

They led 10-6 at half-time. Swann having reduced the lead just before the interval when he slid over in the corner.

Russell pushed through tackles by Tatupu and Stevens to score the home side's third try, which Maloney converted to give the Bears a 16-6 lead. Warrington replied with two tries by Salei Finau, but a couple of penalties by Maloney kept Oldham in front.

Castelford Tigers also ended their Super League campaign with a win, by 12-10 over Sheffield Eagles in a match ruined by torrential rain that left the pitch and surrounding area flooded at the end. Sheffield looked poised to earn a point when Wood followed up his own kick to score a 67th-minute try that converted to level the scores at 10-10, but Castelford snatched victory two minutes from time with a 30-yard penalty from Danny Orr, the substitute, after Sheffield were penalised had been offside.

Both teams found it hard going as the dreadful conditions made handling difficult and the only chances created came from kicks.

The first score was not until

Results and table 41

the thirtieth minute and the Eagles gained the early advantage with two goals. However, while the Eagles were down to 12 men, Castelford levelled with a 48th-minute try from Richard Gay, who beat Crowther to catch Ford's high kick on the line.

Gay got his second try seven minutes later by capitalising on a kick from Davis, who then put Castelford six points ahead by adding a conversion. Salford Reds staged a rousing second-half comeback to win 37-18 and prevent Halifax

ROWING

Coxless four charge into semi-final

FROM MIKE ROSEWELL IN AGUIERRELETT, FRANCE

GREAT BRITAIN'S coxless four of James Cracknell, Steve Redgrave, Tim Foster and Matthew Pinsent duly booked their place in the semi-finals of the world championship yesterday, despite being forced into a nerve-racking wait after the start of the competition had to be postponed for three hours because of strong winds.

Britain held first place approaching the finish but an easing-up allowed the reformed Italian crew, with three double world champions on board, and Slovenia to close up fast. However, Britain were clearly playing cat and mouse with their opponents and the main interest centred around who would finish second. Slovenia took that honour from Italy after a photo-finish.

David Tanner, the British team manager, said before the race that the "sheer raw power of the crew in final preparation promised something that we have not seen before". There is clearly still plenty to come.

Both the women's pair and double scull followed the example of the men's four and achieved first places in their heats. Dot Blackie and Cath Bishop, in the pair, pipped America, Denmark, and Australia in a blanket finish. The British win came as a result of a storming second 1,000 metres that confirmed their pre-championship status as medal contenders. The double scull of Miriam Batten and Gillian Lindsay suffered the unsettling experience of a broken seat before their race.

The British men's lightweight eight ended their first day "frustrated and determined to do better". They produced a storming 1min 23sec first 500 metres, the fastest of the day, but failed to find the pace when Canada attacked at 750 metres, and finished second. A repechage beckons on Tuesday, as it does, somewhat unexpectedly, for Rob Thatcher and Ben Huxford in Britain's top coxless pair. They were led home by Italy.

GYMNASTICS

New format comes into play

BY PETER TATLOW

THE gymnastics world governing body, the FIG, has designed a new package for the world artistic championships that will be unveiled in Lausanne this week, with compulsory exercises abolished after years of controversy about their overall usefulness.

Purists may miss them, but for the spectator and the lower-placed nations, they have become tedious. The world team event is now voluntary exercises only and the scores of the individual gymnasts from that competition will qualify them for the top 36 overall final, the apparatus finals and a new event — a play-off for the top eight teams.

Another of the new regulations — and one that has caused raised eyebrows — is that gymnasts must be 16 and over to qualify for the world championships. That means Lisa Mason, 15, the British champion, from Huntingdon, will not be able to participate.

How the new regime will affect the top order remains to be seen. At the Olympic Games in Atlanta, Russia, China, Ukraine and Belarus were the top men's teams, while the United States, Russia, Romania and China occupied the women's leading places. Qualification for the Sydney Olympics does not start until the next world championships in China in 1999, so Britain can take the opportunity in Lausanne to assess the new format without being under pressure.

The four British Atlanta Olympians — Lee McDermott, the British champion, Dominic Brindle, Sonia Lawrence and Annika Reeder — will all participate in Switzerland and, although they will not expect to be among the medalists, they will hope to ensure that Britain finishes in the top 12 teams. A place in the top 12 will be the measure for an Olympic team place in the 1999 world championships.

BRITISH TEAM: Men: L. McDermott (Woking), D. Brindle (Leeds), S. Frew (Aldershot), K. Jackson (Harrow), C. Hoag (Leeds), A. Reeder (Barnet), K. Atkinson (Leeds), S. Lawrence (Spelthorne), A. Reeder (Leeds), S. Murray (Harrow), P. Thomas (Barnet), J. Mortimer (Leeds), J. Cox (Harrow), G. Cuff (Harrow).

Even More Savings on International Phone Calls

Australia 19p India 44p USA 10p South Africa 37p
all prices include VAT

	BT Oystel Saving		BT Oystel Saving
Russia	80p 47p 41.25%	Bhutan	£1.32 53p 59.8%
UAE	£1.02 57p 42.2%	Malaysia	77p 45p 41.6%
Singapore	59p 33p 44.1%	Pakistan	£1.34 57p 57.5%
Japan	77p 26p 66.2%	Germany	27p 18p 33.3%
New Zealand	49p 26p 46.9%	Canada	33p 14p 40%

For full details and great savings to hundreds of other countries, call FREE on 0800 279 1500

Prices quoted are per minute, 24 hour rates, 7 days per week. Prices correct on 7.8.97

- Crystal Clear Connections
- Free Instant Connection
- Free Itemised Monthly Statements
- You Can Use Any Touch-Tone Phone
- Bonuses Incentives

'Now it's even cheaper with OYSTEL!'

0800 279 1500

Rob Hughes witnesses the enduring passion of a triathlon legend

Belgian Iron Man shows his mettle

The Iron Man cometh, or, at least, he came briefly to the city of Bath yesterday, where Luc Van Lierde, a 28-year-old Belgian, conquered time, tide and tempest to win one of Britain's most exciting triathlons. He is a phenomenon in a sport that takes competitors to the limits over three consecutive marathons — swimming in the River Avon for 1,500 metres, cycling up and down the gruelling Bathwick Hill for 40 kilometres and then completing the journey by running four laps around the historical city, a distance of ten kilometres.

For Van Lierde, it was effectively a training distance, a contest against the course and the violent climatic elements, rather than those seeking to beat him. The Belgian recently posted a 2hr 30min marathon ... and before anyone raises an eyebrow about that time, consider that Van Lierde had run the 26.2 miles immediately after cycling 112 miles — and that straight off the back of a 2.7-mile swim.

He was in Bath yesterday to come down to the spirit, if not the level, of almost 400 intrepid Britons, ranging from those who had never competed in a triathlon to those gearing themselves towards Olympic performance.

Into the brown and murky River Avon, Van Lierde, slender but with highly-defined muscle on every part of his body, did not look so very special. The storms had whipped up the swell and the tide on the river so that even those who have swum this annual event before found themselves almost going backwards. They had to swim close to the shelter of a huge wall and though Van Lierde, completing the 1,500 metres in 20 minutes exactly, admitted he found the current testing, then so did David Wilkie.

The 1976 Olympic Games 200 metre breaststroke gold medal-winner was not competing directly against Van Lierde, but had entered himself in the relay event, in which he swam, another man cycled and a third ran.

Now 43 and ten years away from serious training, Wilkie found the waters more testing, apart from the cold, than the Channel, which he swam three years ago. "You can never take the competitive

Out on his own, Van Lierde is in splendid isolation during the cycling phase of the triathlon in Bath yesterday spirit out of a real competitor," he said. "Today rekindled the feeling of how tough it used to be, but then I had the carrot of swimming for gold; here it was for a bit of fun, to test myself again."

Wilkie's runner yesterday was Nick Bourne, a former British 400 metres hurdler who opted out of international sport, finding it too political and too riddled with drugs. Bourne is taking a sabbatical from working for a sports management company to run

6,250 miles in 174 days, from Alexandria, in Egypt, to Cape Town, in South Africa. The run starts in a fortnight, will involve 45 miles a day and, with Bourne describing it as "a spiritual odyssey", is aimed at raising funds for Save the Children and the Born Free Foundation.

You may get the impression that yesterday the West Country was a place for obsessives, but it was also for human beings who like to test their mind and body to the limits.

Patrick Barnes, a Middlesex runner who has completed 30 marathons and 130 triathlons, would not demure from that description. The race organisers, seeing him struggle into the teeth of the wind during the cycling, seeing him twice attempt to pump up a tyre and riding on the bare rim, intervened to abort his race. So Barnes defiantly ran an extra couple of laps ... at the age of 82, this imperishable athlete reckons he has the right to run and compete as far as he determines; he says it keeps the arthritis at bay.

Meanwhile, Van Lierde had come off the water and was a human metronome in the saddle. He had never ridden the course before, was barefoot in the stirrups having peeled off his wet suit, and for each of the six laps on the bike, he returned a time of 13min 20sec.

He was scarcely blowing when he came into the transition area, where each man must park his cycle, remove

'He is a phenomenon in a sport that takes competitors to the limits'

his helmet and don his running shoes. Van Lierde's technique of removing his helmet as he jogged around the track before parking his bike was to cost him a two-minute penalty; apparently, the rules of the event differ from country to country.

He was told on the second lap of his run the penalty, shrugged it off as he shrugged off the opposition, and won in a canter. His amended time was 2hr 21min 27sec, more than three minutes ahead of Scott Forbes, of Loughborough, and Richard Stannard, of London. The Belgian collected a princely first prize of £500 ... but to him this was a stop along the road to Hawaii where, in the autumn, he will swim, cycle and run triple the distance, attempting to retain the Iron Man championship, which no other European before him had achieved. A phenomenon? Yesterday was no more than a drop of sweat off the brow.

SPORT IN BRIEF

Agostini landmark equalled by Doohan

MICHAEL DOOHAN'S complete dominance of the 1997 world 500cc motorcycle championship continued yesterday when he won the Czech Grand Prix in Brno. Doohan, who has already secured his fourth successive world title, won for the eleventh time in 12 races, equalling the record set by Giacomo Agostini in 1972. Doohan, who crossed the finishing line on one wheel, was almost 15 seconds in front of Luca Cadalora, of Italy.

Carl Fogarty, of Great Britain, closed the gap on John Kocinski, of the United States, in the ninth round of the world superbike championships in Assen, Holland yesterday. Fogarty, riding a Ducati, won the second of the afternoon's two races and finished second to Kocinski in the first to move to 312 points in the standings, just two points behind Kocinski, the leader, with three rounds to go in Spain, Japan and Indonesia.

Price loses out

BOWLS: Mary Price saw her winning run come to an end at the Atlantic Rim Championships in Llandrindod Wells yesterday when she lost to Betty Morgan, 18-25, in the tenth round of matches. Margaret Johnston, of Ireland, the former world champion, stepped in to take full advantage of Price's defeat. She went back to the top of the overall standings after wins over On-Kow-Au, of Canada, and Maria Cabrera, of Argentina. Jo Peacock, the defending champion, from South Africa, moved into third spot behind Johnston and Price after a 25-11 win over Jean Joubert. Peacock provides the opposition for Johnston tomorrow.

Dobson shares lead

GOLF: Helen Dobson, of Great Britain, had a round of 65, seven under par, to share the lead after the first round of the State Farm Rail Classic in Springfield, Illinois. Dobson, whose only LPGA victory came at this event in 1993, had four consecutive birdies on the outward nine, but missed a six-foot birdie putt on her 17th, the par-five 8th, that would have given her sole possession of the lead. Sherri Steinhauer and Dana Dormann, of the United States, share the lead. Steinhauer had eight birdies and a bogey while Dormann had an eagle, six birdies and a bogey. Tina Barrett is a shot further back.

Defeat for Boardman

CYCLING: Chris Boardman suffered a rare international time-trial defeat yesterday when he was beaten by Abraham Olano, of Spain, in the 61-kilometre Grand Prix Eddie Merckx in Brussels. Olano finished in 1hr 9min 2sec after leading throughout. Boardman lost time on the Spaaiard at every check to complete the course in a time of 1hr 10min 22sec for the full distance; earlier, he had dropped a drink handed up by his manager at the half-way point. Boardman won the trial last year and in 1993 and starts in the Tour of Spain on Saturday.

Richardson makes mark

GOLF: Ian Richardson claimed his maiden PGA European Seniors Tour victory yesterday when he won the Motor Seniors Classic at Goodwood Park with a final round of 71 and a total of 208, eight under par. Richardson, 51, in his first season on the Tour, struck the decisive blow on the last hole of the tournament, putting a 30-yard bunker shot to two feet. It led to the fourth birdie of his round and it gave him a one-shot victory over Eddie Pollard, the former Ryder Cup player, and Derry Simon, of the United States. Richardson won £12,500, the biggest prize of his career.

CYCLING

McGregor makes do with pursuit bronze

By PETER BRYAN

THERE was no gold medal for Yvonne McGregor in Perth, Australia, yesterday, the closing day of the world track championships. She had to settle for bronze in the 3,000 metres pursuit, but maintained Britain's record of a medal in every championship series since 1991.

Pre-championship events, particularly the World Cup competition in Athens last June, when she beat the Olympic champion, Antonella Bellutti, indicated that McGregor would be a serious challenger, but neither appeared comfortable yesterday. Bellutti was beaten in a quarter-final by Natalia Karimova, who later lost in the final to Judith Arndt, of Germany, the Olympic bronze medal-winner.

The 20-year-old Arndt defeated McGregor in the semi-final, but McGregor took the bronze because her time was faster than that of the other losing semi-finalist, Lucy Tyler-Sharman, of Australia, who was beaten by Karimova.

Arndt was quick off the mark against McGregor and led for the first seven of the 12-lap race. The British champi-

McGregor, faded

WORD-WATCHING

Answers from page 51

ABHORRIBLE

(a) A fancifully formed adjective from abhor. "Hamlet's uncle, Claudius, seems to me to be the most that can be borne of one purely abhorrible."

FRABJOUS

(a) A nonsense-word invented by "Lewis Carroll" (C. L. Dodgson) apparently intended to suggest "fair" and "joyous". Kipling, Stalky & Co, 1899: "You're a dirty little schoolboy. Besides being frabjously immoral."

DAKHMA

(a) A tower of silence for exposing the dead. The Persian word, dakhma. "The dead are to be left on the appointed places (dakhmas) and exposed to the vultures and wild dogs."

CHINO

(a) A cotton twill cloth, usually khaki in colour. Also (usually plural) a garment, especially trousers, made of this cloth. From the American Spanish chino (silk), referring to its usual colour. "Her skirt was nicely tailored of some fine khaki material, or maybe the stuff is called chino when it joins the aristocracy."

SOLUTION TO WINNING CHESS MOVE

1.e5 traps the knight on f6.

HOCKEY

England save face after humiliation

England 3
Australia 4

By SYDNEY FRISKIN

ENGLISH pride was restored at Milton Keynes stadium on Saturday when Australia were driven to the limit of their powers before snatching victory with only four minutes to spare in the second of two international matches.

The bitter memory of the 10-0 drubbing by Australia at Basingstoke on Thursday night was obliterated with England establishing a 3-1 lead by half-time. The advantage was held until well into the second half, when late dealt the home side a cruel blow.

Jon Wyatt, one of the pillars of defence, was suspended for ten minutes and Garcia had to fall back to fill the gap. While Wyatt was off the field, Australia climbed back into the game with a goal in the 48th minute by Matthew Smith.

With only seven minutes left, Hiskins scrambled in a goal for Australia from a short corner to level the score and, in the 60th minute, a piercing run on the right flank by Garard opened the door for a brilliant match-winner by Davies.

There could hardly have been a more heartening start for England. Giles converted a short corner in the third minute and, after Stacey had levelled the score six minutes later, Giles hit the target again from another short corner for a 2-1 lead. England went further ahead in the 26th minute when Crutchley scored on the follow-up from another short corner, but it was all too good to last.

Terry Walsh, the Australia coach, expressed his relief at the end of what he described as an excellent match. "We got ourselves into a trap and struggled throughout the first half, but to come back and win after being 3-1 down was not a bad effort," he said.

Garcia, England's man of the match, said: "On Thursday, we did not play international hockey, but this time, we showed wonderful concentration."

ENGLAND: S. Hiskins, J. Wyatt, J. Halls, A. Humphrey, B. Stacey, J. Friskin, W. Walsh, C. Mayer, R. Garcia (captain), D. Hall, N. Thompson. Substitutes used: R. Crutchley, D. Woods, G. Giles.

AUSTRALIA: L. Davies, D. Sproule, M. York, C. Taylor, B. Deniro, D. Warrilow, J. Durr, M. Smith, S. Davies, J. Hiskins, J. Stacey, P. Lewis. Substitutes used: G. Corbett, J. Elmer, P. Gaudson, L. Hiskins, P. Edwards and A. Schellkens (both Holland).

Germany snatch title

ENGLAND, although level on points with Germany, finished second in the four-nation under-21 tournament that ended at Milton Keynes yesterday (Sydney Friskin writes). The deciding factor was the result of the match between the two teams on Saturday that finished 4-2 in favour of Germany.

In the concluding match yesterday, England romped through a fragile Belgium defence to win 8-0. They led 5-0 at the end of a first half that was dominated by Garard, who set up the first and third goals.

Tom Matthews, of Oxford University, scored three goals, with two from short corners. The remaining scorers were Simons, Manpreet Kochar, Haydon, Humphries and Irvine, Belgium, whose raids were sporadic, came closest to a score in the last few minutes when Taylor, the goalkeeper, made a diving save to avert a shot from a short corner.

The surprise of the day, however, was the 3-2 victory by Ireland, who defeated Germany with a display of skill and industry that put the opposition off its stride. Jackson and Ahern scored from short corners in the first half and, although Germany hit back through Lunau-Mierke from a short corner two minutes into the second half, Ahern scored again for Ireland from another short corner. Moulders replied for Germany two minutes before the end. On Saturday, Ireland managed to snatch a 2-2 draw with Belgium.

Results, page 41

THE SUNDAY TIMES

NEXT SUNDAY, PREPARE FOR TAKE OFF.

Don't miss the British Midland flights offer to Europe, starting next Sunday in The Sunday Times.

British Midland

THE SUNDAY TIMES

Offers exclude Republic of Ireland and mainland Europe.

Some enlightenment on a gloomy Sunday

Theoretical physics, we are told, will eventually provide the answer to absolutely everything. But until then it's making do with depressing generalisations, such as this disheartening offering from Professor Stephen Hawking last night: "The more we know, the less special our place in the Universe seems." For those of us in need of cheering up, Stephen Hawking's Universe (BBC2) did not seem the place to be.

But, on second thoughts, perhaps it was. For Hawking had the most extraordinary story of human accomplishment to tell — from the Ancient Greek mathematician who used two sticks and their shadows to calculate the circumference of the Earth to within a hundred miles, to Galileo, whose discovery of moons that circled Jupiter rather than Earth cost him his liberty. It's a story of relentless progress that begins with science but which has always had huge implications for both theology and philosophy.

At the frontier of the story today we find Hawking, whose cruel muscle-wasting disease has made him not so much a scientific personality as a scientific presence. Not, however, so much a presence as to have lost his sense of humour. Proudly he pointed out that he had sold more books about physics than Madonna had about sex. That said, I don't know anyone who got to the end of either.

There were few such problems last night for those who despite the best of intentions fell by the wayside during A Brief History of Time, Hawking's bestseller. This was a story that, unless the syllabuses have changed drastically, would have been familiar to GCSE candidates everywhere and indeed to anyone who watched the recent anniversary edition of The Sky at Night. Ptolemy, Copernicus, Kepler, Galileo, Newton...

the paradigms fell one by one as Hawking pursued his impressively clear objective.

The Earth was not flat but spherical. It was not the Earth that lay at the heart of the solar system but the Sun. It was not our solar system at the centre of the Universe, but... Well, here it did get a bit complicated, as in what ever the name Einstein is mentioned, but as far as I could tell, it was thanks to Einstein, Doppler and Hubble that we know that the Universe has no centre. The rest of the day's television reminded us that it also has no heart.

Hawking's appearances were limited to those of any able-bodied scientific superstar. He was there at the beginning and end and every now and then he would pop up to muddy the water with talk of black holes and dark matter. Quite what his contribution was to those sections of the script read not by his synthesised voice but by Jeff Rawle was unclear, but as Chapter One got it had been an impressive start and I look forward to tackling more challenging instalments on days when it is easier to concentrate.

REVIEW

Matthew Bond

In his own special way Michael Palin covered similar ground, simply by spinning a globe. Suddenly, the centre of our own little universe, that little blob off the edge of continental Europe that we call home, gave way for the perfect blue circle of the Pacific Ocean. Faced with such pleasing symmetry, you wondered why nobody had thought of travelling round it before? By which I mean somebody British, of course.

If Hawking's series is going to be good for our astrophysics, then Full Circle with Michael Palin (BBC2) should do even better things for our geography — if only because opening an atlas is a lot easier than wrestling with the space-time continuum. Not that Palin avoided the latter altogether. He started on the island of Little Diomedé, an Eskimo settlement in the middle of the Bering Strait. Thanks to nearby Alaska, Little Diomedé is American, but a few hundred yards over the water is Great Diomedé, Russian-owned but uninhabited. Between them lies the International Date Line

"On Great Diomedé, it's already tomorrow," observed Palin, solemnly. That was about as profound as it got.

The rest turned out to be a real treat, a skilful blend of the spontaneous and what the suspicious among us might believe was the artfully contrived. Had Palin really learnt a Russian marching song in rainy Kamchatka without knowing that he would end up singing it with the Pacific Fleet Ensemble in Vladivostok? If he hadn't, the gods are on his side.

What I had forgotten, since this last jaunt, is what good company Palin is. Where others can make the pursuit of travelogue humour look laboured, he makes it look effortless. He even got away with the old chestnut about Russian baths not having plugs, through the simple precaution of having learnt (just about) the Russian word for

"plug". The tired old alternative of the Englishman abroad shouting louder and louder would not have been funny, but a firm "nyet" was — several times.

So far, he has travelled by walrus-skin speedboat, stretch limo, seaplane, passenger jet and the rustiest looking helicopter a BBC film crew can ever have encountered. It was to their great credit that they and their 43 pieces of luggage (due for a good checking-in) not only got in but eventually took off.

Finally, by my reckoning it is now 50 years, two weeks and four days since India gained its independence, which seems a funny time for Mark Tully's Faces of India (Channel 4, Saturday) to be getting under way. But better late than never and, together with William Dalrymple's Stones of the Raj, Tully's well-selected profiles make up a hugely enjoyable hour for Indians everywhere.

BBC1

8.00pm Due to the death of Diana, Princess of Wales, the following programmes are liable to rescheduling

8.00pm Business Breakfast (58888)

8.30pm BBC Breakfast News (T) (88441807)

9.05pm Can't Cook, Won't Cook New Series (T) (2829604)

9.30pm Style Challenge New Series (1127604)

9.55pm Kilroy (T) (5178265)

10.35pm Change That New Series (1259791)

11.00pm (T) and weather (4538158)

11.05pm The Really Useful Show New Series (T) (9578178)

11.35pm Room for Improvement New Series (1249178)

12.00pm (T) and weather (6001081)

12.05pm Call My Bluff New Series (9377772)

12.35pm Going for a Song New Series (9282333)

1.00pm One O'Clock News (T) (62802)

1.30pm Regional News (17186159)

1.40pm The Weather Show (8703472)

1.45pm Neighbours (T) (77812352)

2.10pm Quilley (T) (9041541)

3.00pm Through the Keyhole (7533420)

3.25pm Playdays (7525553) 3.50pm Postman Pat (1282420) 4.05pm Little Mouse on the Prairie (4348604) 4.25pm The All-New Popeye Show (3329913) 4.35pm Goosebumps: new adventure series (6335336)

5.00pm Newsround (T) (8758772)

5.10pm Blue Peter (T) (5654488)

5.35pm Neighbours (T) (434772)

6.00pm Six O'Clock News (81)

6.30pm Regional News (33)

7.00pm This is Your Life Michael Aspel with a new series (T) (9523)

7.30pm Mastermind The last-ever final, from St Magnus Cathedral, Kirkwall, Orkney. (T) (17)

8.00pm EastEnders Bianca keeps the truth hidden from Ricky (T) (8371)

8.30pm Only Fools and Horses Rodney dreams of becoming a music legend (T) (4178)

9.00pm Nine O'Clock News (T) (3420)

9.30pm Bloomin' Marvellous New series. Bitter-sweet sitcom about first-time parenthood (T) (34994)

10.00pm Preston Front Comedy drama (T) (154710)

10.40pm Full Circle with Michael Palin (T) (562265) WALLES: 10.40pm Answering Back (235389) 11.10pm Full Circle with Michael Palin (901975) 12.00pm Film 97 with Barry Norman (13014) 12.30pm Film: Body Parts (5327956) 1.55pm News headlines and weather (2451855)

11.30pm Film 97 with Barry Norman New series. Mike Brown with Judi Dench and Billy Connolly. Conspiracy Theory, with Julia Roberts and Mel Gibson; and Austin Powers: International Man of Mystery, with Mike Myers and Elizabeth Hurley. Plus: The Lost World and other summer blockbusters (T) (8655)

12.00pm Body Parts (1981) Jeff Fahey stars as a criminal psychologist who loses an arm in a car crash and is given a transplant from a dead psychopath. Directed by Eric Red (T) (2229579)

12.00pm Weather (4615647)

VideoPlus+ and the Video PlusCodes The numbers next to each TV programme listing are Video PlusCodes. These allow you to programme your video recorder instantly with a VideoPlus+ handset. Tap in the Video PlusCode (VPC) and the video will record. VideoPlus+ is a trademark of Gemstar Development Ltd.

BBC2

6.00am OU: The Academy of Wastes? (4168807) 6.25pm Children First (4178642) 6.50pm Children and New Technology (T) (5976642) 7.15pm See Hear Breakfast News (4160682)

7.30pm Smurfs' Adventures (T) (5114739) 7.55pm To Me, Lo You (T) (5119517) 8.20pm Music-a-Grains (T) (3978234) 8.35pm Teletubbies (T) (1781807) 9.00pm Harry and the Hendersons (T) (2388975) 9.20pm Flash Gordon (T) (3584197) 9.45pm Rocky Star (T) (8289994) 9.50pm Cartoon (8377159) 10.00pm Teletubbies (T) (90913)

10.30pm Sherlock Holmes and the Voice of Terror (1942, b/w) Mystery thriller transferring the intrepid Baker Street sleuth from Victorian times to the 1940s, enabling him to thwart the Nazis. With Basil Rathbone and Nigel Bruce. Directed by John Rawlins (3069772)

11.35pm The Fugitive (T) (9023555) 12.20pm Performance (T) (6000739) 12.30pm Working Lunch (12772) 1.00pm The GreasySausage Gang (T) (7319255) 1.05pm Harry Jeremy (T) 1.10pm The Craft Hour (4432028) 2.10pm Wildlife on Two (8113804)

2.40pm News (T) (1543888) 2.45pm Malch of the Sevens (T) (948781) 3.25pm News (T) (596772) 3.30pm Rent Rooms (9) 4.00pm Ready, Steady, Cook (48) 4.30pm Going, Going, Gone (832807) 4.55pm Esther (3291438) 5.30pm Today's the Day (10)

6.00pm Battlefield Galactica (T) (802159)

6.50pm Right Here, Right Now Oasis plugged (T) (101265)

7.30pm The Day That Changed My Life A man's fight for survival after the failure of his export business cost him his family and his livelihood (T) (59)

8.00pm Jeremy Clarkson's Motorworld Cuba (T) (913)

8.30pm The Travel Show Mainland Greece: accommodation on the island of Mull (5420)

9.00pm Changing Rooms Three dentists and a doctor decorate (T) (1082)

9.30pm All Mod Cons Changing fashions in home design (T) (32536)

10.00pm Sykes (T) (93159)

10.30pm Newsnight (T) (114352)

11.15pm Jonathan Miller's Opera Works A new series of masterclasses analysing operatic works (T) (16975)

12.00pm Weather (7302753) 12.05pm Platypus Man (3039753)

12.30pm Learning Zone: Mining for Science (4837) 1.00pm Mantegna: The Triumphs of Caesar (87227) 1.30pm Greenberg on Art Criticism (91918) 2.00pm The Art of Criticism (91918) 4.00pm BBC Focus: Lingua Italiana (87579) 4.30pm Royal Institution Lecture (15376) 5.30pm RCN Nursing Update (83955)

3.00pm Coronation Street The Weatherfield women express their disapproval of home-breaker Natalie (T) (3)

8.00pm Michael Barrymore's Strike It Rich Michael Barrymore returns with a new series (T) (9589)

8.30pm Police Academy 6: City Under Siege (1989) with Bubba Smith, David Graf and Michael Winslow. The inept recruits return, this time to halt the actions of a crime lord wreaking havoc on the city's property market. Directed by Peter Bonerz (48007)

10.00pm News at Ten (T) and weather (13913)

10.30pm Regional News (T) (824420)

10.40pm The Hum Examining a mystery illness that has baffled science and plagued an increasing number of people particularly in the West Country (88081)

11.40pm Hunter (T) (522517)

12.40pm Film: The Edge (833918)

1.40pm War of the Worlds (T) (872005)

3.20pm Rockmania (T) (3255802)

4.20pm Heller Skelter (3452208)

5.00pm Coronation Street (T) (40208)

5.30pm TNN News (T) (95531)

HTV

8.00pm Due to the death of Diana, Princess of Wales, the following programmes are liable to rescheduling

6.00am GMTV (7922623)

9.25pm TNN News (T) (2385888)

9.55pm Regional News (T) (1842449)

10.00pm The Time, The Place New series of studio debates (94739)

10.30pm This Morning Richard Madeley and Judy Finnigan return, including News and Regional News at 11.00 (T) (8643352)

12.20pm Regional News (T) (6097265)

12.30pm TNN News (T) (9278130)

12.55pm High Road (T) (9293449)

1.25pm Home and Away (T) (58910716)

1.50pm Girls at Sea (1958) Nautical farce with Michael Horden, Guy Rolfe and Ronald Shiner. Directed by Gilbert Gunn (6822629)

3.20pm News (T) (4524555)

3.25pm Regional News (T) (4523826)

3.30pm Tots TV (T) (1273772) 3.40pm The Slow Norris (T) (7016504) 3.50pm Wolves, Wolves and Wolves (T) (1000000) 4.00pm Seaside, Seaside and Seaside (T) (4333772) 4.25pm The Best of Hey Arnold! (T) (4342420) 4.50pm How 2 (T) (6155975)

5.10pm Look and Cook (2192604)

5.40pm TNN News (T) and weather (106438)

6.00pm Home and Away (T) (T) (860975)

6.25pm HTV Weather (779284)

6.30pm Regional News (T) (71)

6.55pm HTV Crimestoppers (734994)

7.00pm Talking Telephone Numbers New series with Philip Schofield and Claudia Winkleman (4791)

7.30pm Coronation Street The Weatherfield women express their disapproval of home-breaker Natalie (T) (3)

8.00pm Michael Barrymore's Strike It Rich Michael Barrymore returns with a new series (T) (9589)

8.30pm Police Academy 6: City Under Siege (1989) with Bubba Smith, David Graf and Michael Winslow. The inept recruits return, this time to halt the actions of a crime lord wreaking havoc on the city's property market. Directed by Peter Bonerz (48007)

10.00pm News at Ten (T) and weather (13913)

10.30pm Regional News (T) (824420)

10.40pm The Hum Examining a mystery illness that has baffled science and plagued an increasing number of people particularly in the West Country (88081)

11.40pm Hunter (T) (522517)

12.40pm Film: The Edge (833918)

1.40pm War of the Worlds (T) (872005)

3.20pm Rockmania (T) (3255802)

4.20pm Heller Skelter (3452208)

5.00pm Coronation Street (T) (40208)

5.30pm TNN News (T) (95531)

5.50pm Coronation Street (T) (40208)

6.00pm Coronation Street (T) (40208)

6.25pm HTV Weather (779284)

6.30pm Regional News (T) (71)

6.55pm HTV Crimestoppers (734994)

7.00pm Talking Telephone Numbers New series with Philip Schofield and Claudia Winkleman (4791)

7.30pm Coronation Street The Weatherfield women express their disapproval of home-breaker Natalie (T) (3)

8.00pm Michael Barrymore's Strike It Rich Michael Barrymore returns with a new series (T) (9589)

8.30pm Police Academy 6: City Under Siege (1989) with Bubba Smith, David Graf and Michael Winslow. The inept recruits return, this time to halt the actions of a crime lord wreaking havoc on the city's property market. Directed by Peter Bonerz (48007)

10.00pm News at Ten (T) and weather (13913)

10.30pm Regional News (T) (824420)

10.40pm The Hum Examining a mystery illness that has baffled science and plagued an increasing number of people particularly in the West Country (88081)

CENTRAL

As HTV West except:

12.55pm-1.25pm A Country Practice (9293449)

1.25pm Home and Away (58910716)

1.50pm Girls at Sea (1958) Nautical farce with Michael Horden, Guy Rolfe and Ronald Shiner. Directed by Gilbert Gunn (6822629)

3.20pm News (T) (4524555)

3.25pm Regional News (T) (4523826)

3.30pm Tots TV (T) (1273772) 3.40pm The Slow Norris (T) (7016504) 3.50pm Wolves, Wolves and Wolves (T) (1000000) 4.00pm Seaside, Seaside and Seaside (T) (4333772) 4.25pm The Best of Hey Arnold! (T) (4342420) 4.50pm How 2 (T) (6155975)

5.10pm Look and Cook (2192604)

5.40pm TNN News (T) and weather (106438)

6.00pm Home and Away (T) (T) (860975)

6.25pm HTV Weather (779284)

6.30pm Regional News (T) (71)

6.55pm HTV Crimestoppers (734994)

7.00pm Talking Telephone Numbers New series with Philip Schofield and Claudia Winkleman (4791)

7.30pm Coronation Street The Weatherfield women express their disapproval of home-breaker Natalie (T) (3)

8.00pm Michael Barrymore's Strike It Rich Michael Barrymore returns with a new series (T) (9589)

8.30pm Police Academy 6: City Under Siege (1989) with Bubba Smith, David Graf and Michael Winslow. The inept recruits return, this time to halt the actions of a crime lord wreaking havoc on the city's property market. Directed by Peter Bonerz (48007)

10.00pm News at Ten (T) and weather (13913)

10.30pm Regional News (T) (824420)

10.40pm The Hum Examining a mystery illness that has baffled science and plagued an increasing number of people particularly in the West Country (88081)

11.40pm Hunter (T) (522517)

12.40pm Film: The Edge (833918)

1.40pm War of the Worlds (T) (872005)

3.20pm Rockmania (T) (3255802)

4.20pm Heller Skelter (3452208)

5.00pm Coronation Street (T) (40208)

5.30pm TNN News (T) (95531)

PREMIER CHOICE
Simon Barnes on the rise of Rio Ferdinand
All the weekend football
PAGES 48-51

CHASING THE FLAME
Rob Hughes looks at the cities bidding for the 2004 Olympics
PAGE 47

GAME ON
Have you joined the £100,000 game? PAGE 39

POWER PLAY
Rusedski makes progress at the US Open tennis
PAGE 52

TIMES SPORT

MONDAY SEPTEMBER 1 1997

Ballesteros is forced to play waiting game

FROM JOHN HOPKINS, GOLF CORRESPONDENT, IN MUNICH

THE Europe team for the forthcoming Ryder Cup match against the United States in southern Spain later this month was not announced here last night as it should have been. Nine of the 12-man team are known because the qualifying process ended last night at the conclusion of the BMW International Open, but the complication over the ability of the tenth, Miguel Angel Martin, to hit a golf ball since he injured himself seven weeks ago caused an embarrassing delay to the announcement of the team.

The stage was set here at the Golfclub Munchen Nord-Eichenried for an announcement to rival that made by the Americans the morning after the recent US PGA Championship, when Tom Kite presented the names of the men who completed his team for Valderrama. Champagne was served, television cameras were pointed expectantly at a dais on which sat, among other, Sandy Jones, the executive director of the PGA, Ken Schofield, the executive director of the PGA European Tour, and Severiano Ballesteros, the Europe captain.

But when it came to it, the whole thing went off with all the fizz of a day-old bottle of champagne. "I'm afraid I have no team to announce," Ballesteros, resplendent in a

Michael Calvin 54
Karlsson's triumph 54

blue blazer and blue tie, said. He had the grace to look slightly sheepish.

The difficulty is created by the fact that Martin has retained the tenth place in the Ryder Cup points table even though he has not played since he missed the cut at the Open, having injured his right wrist in a tournament at Loch Lomond the week before. He has since had an operation on it and the plaster was removed last Monday.

It had been expected that Jose Maria Olazabal or Padraig Harrington would win enough money in this last counting event to knock Martin out of tenth place. Had this happened then, Ballesteros would have been able to name the two men he will select to complete his team. But Olazabal, who got closest, failed to dislodge Martin by £3,000.

So the Ryder Cup Committee have come up with something that borders on the bizarre. They have stated that on Wednesday Martin must prove his fitness to the satisfaction of his own doctor, and a representative of the committee, at a venue yet to be announced at an as-yet unknown time. Based upon what is discovered then, the committee will announce on Thursday, in Crans, Switzerland, where this week's PGA tournament will have begun, whether or not Martin has passed the test. They would not say when this announcement will be made other than "probably after the first round." This does sound muddy. Why wait until Thursday evening?

In a world that would have been ideal for everyone except Martin, he would have withdrawn last week. This would have meant Olazabal taking his position in the team and this, in turn, would have enabled Ballesteros to select Nick Faldo and Jesper Parnevik, the two strongest candidates for the team who have not otherwise qualified.

A team that includes Martin but not one of either Faldo, Olazabal and Parnevik, is not the strongest possible Europe team and, hard as it is to say, it would have benefited Europe more for Martin either to have declared himself unfit or to have been knocked out of the top ten. If either of these eventualities had happened, there is no chance that Europe will have a team member at Valderrama who has not played competitive golf for months, a chance that clearly exists at present. Martin may have hit some putts, indeed shown he is capable of playing golf, but will he be match fit in the accepted sense for the most important event of his career. Ballesteros cannot be envied for captaining a team that is not the strongest available and furthermore faces an American can squad that contains three of this year's four major championship winners.

Olazabal lines up a putt during his final round at the BMW Open yesterday

However, Martin, 35, has never before played in a Ryder Cup and is desperately anxious to do so, particularly the first to be held outside Britain and Ireland and in his home country. "I am getting stronger every day," Martin said in Madrid last week. "I am making every effort. I have worked too hard to get to where I am just to withdraw. The doctors keep telling me I am recovering much quicker than expected."

Furthermore, the Ryder Cup Committee felt that if they did not give Martin a fair chance to recover from this injury they could be liable to legal action from him. "We're running a business and we have to be aware of all eventualities and that he might sue is one of them," Schofield said.

"We spoke to Miguel Angel Martin in Madrid this afternoon," Schofield continued, "and his position is that he will recommence putting practice later this week and also driving. From what I have heard, however, his chances are not great." If Martin fails this fitness test, Ballesteros confirmed that Olazabal would move up to the tenth position that Martin had formerly occupied.

So, whether or not Faldo will play in his eleventh successive Ryder Cup, whether Olazabal if selected by the captain for the fifth time in

Sport reflects national mourning

BY JOHN GOODBODY

ENGLAND and Scotland's World Cup qualifying games, scheduled to be played over the next ten days, may be postponed if they clash with the funeral or official day of mourning for Diana, Princess of Wales. The football authorities, who reacted swiftly to the death of the Princess by postponing yesterday's leading professional fixtures, are already consulting the Government about the international dates.

England are due to meet Moldova at Wembley on Wednesday week. Scotland face Belarus at Aberdeen on Saturday, with their under-21 teams playing the previous night in Perth.

The football authorities yesterday called off leading fixtures, including Liverpool's home game against Newcastle United in the FA Carling Premiership and Celtic's match with Rangers in the Bell's Scottish League premier division, which was to have been played today.

This is the first time since King George VI died on Wednesday, February 6, 1952 that football has postponed matches for the death of anyone from outside the national game. In 1952, Football League matches took place on the following Saturday, but all games in the greater London area for the following week, when the monarch's funeral took place, were called off.

In rugby union, both Allied Dunbar Premiership matches were put off yesterday. Newcastle's game against Northampton was postponed quickly, but the decision for the Saracens v Richmond match was not made until 90 minutes before the kick-off.

Yesterday's Stones Super League rugby league games and Axa Life League cricket matches — weather permitting — went ahead, but were preceded with a minute or two of silence. The exception was Northamptonshire's home match with Durham, which was postponed out of respect to Earl Spencer, brother of the late Princess and a patron of Northamptonshire county cricket club.

EUROPE'S RYDER CUP QUALIFIERS

CAPTAIN: Severiano Ballesteros (Spain)

Thomas Bjorn Denmark Age: 26. Ryder Cup: Debut. Came to the fore in European golf via the Challenge tour. A long hitter who puts with his left hand below his right. This is not to avoid the yips, though his putting is not the best part of his game, but because he has done so since he was 15.	Colin Montgomerie Scotland Age: 34. Ryder Cup: 3 (1991-93-95). Record: Played 13 Won 6 Lost 5 Halved 2 Points: 7. Singles W 3 L 2 H 1. Foursomes W 3 L 2 H 0. Fourballs W 1 L 2 H 2. A huge responsibility rests on the shoulders of the strongest of Europe and in singles, at which he is unbeaten, he has borne this load. Must perform as well in fourballs and foursomes too.
Darren Clarke Northern Ireland Age: 25. Ryder Cup: Debut. A big man who may form a partnership with Colin Montgomerie who has been something of a mentor. Powerful off the tee and a good iron player. His weakness is his putting.	Miguel Angel Martin Spain Age: 35. Ryder Cup: Debut. Martin presents a convincing argument for critics of the Europe selection system. Has won only two tournaments in a 15-year career, missed the cut in one third of the events he has played this year and still has to prove his fitness after injuring a wrist the week before the Open.
Ignacio Garrido Spain Age: 25. Ryder Cup: Debut. The son of Antonio, who was paired with Ballesteros in the 1979 Ryder Cup, the first to include competitors from mainland Europe. Only the second father and son combination after the Alfassers. Garrido may be shepherded through the opening rounds of his first Ryder Cup by Jose Maria Olazabal.	Costantino Rocca Italy Age: 40. Ryder Cup: 2 (1993-95). Record: Played 23 Won 13 Lost 6 Halved 4 Points: 3. Singles: W 0 L 2 H 0. Foursomes: W 2 L 0 H 0. Fourballs: W 3 L 2 H 0. Parsoned Sam Torrance successfully in the foursomes at Oak Hill and scored the competition's fourth hole-in-one when playing with Woosnam in the second afternoon's fourballs.
Peter Uhlir Johansson Sweden Age: 30. Ryder Cup: 1 (1995). Record: Played 3 Won 1 Lost 2 Halved 0 Points: 1. Singles: W 0 L 1 H 0. Foursomes: W 1 L 0 H 0. Fourballs: W 0 L 1 H 0. Earned more than half the points that got him into the team by winning the 1996 European Open at The R Club near Dublin and then successfully defended his title there two weeks ago. A teammate of Phil Mickelson's in the Arizona State University golf team.	Lee Westwood England Age: 24. Ryder Cup: Debut. Perhaps the most promising young player to emerge in Europe for the year. Finished in the top 30 at each of this year's major championships. Confident and strong. Would not be intimidated by Seve's Tiger Wood in the singles.
Bernhard Langer Germany Age: 40. Ryder Cup: 8 (1981-83-85-87-89-91-93-95). Record: Played 34 Won 15 Lost 14 Halved 5 Points: 27. Singles: W 2 L 3 H 3. Foursomes: W 6 L 5 H 2. Fourballs: W 5 L 5 H 2. Langer has had more partners than anyone in Ryder Cup history 12 in all. "They use me to break them in," he jokes.	Ian Woosnam Wales Age: 39. Ryder Cup: 7 (1983-85-87-89-91-93-95). Record: Played 29 Won 13 Lost 11 Halved 5 Points: 15. Singles: W 0 L 5 H 2. Foursomes: W 4 L 3 H 0. Fourballs: W 9 L 3 H 1. Fifth highest points scorer for Europe behind Faldo, Ballesteros, Langer and Jacklin... and this without winning a point from seven singles. Has, however, won more fourball matches than anyone, nine in all.

TWO CAPTAIN'S SELECTIONS TO BE ANNOUNCED THIS WEEK

SUMMER SALE

DEPARTURES SEPTEMBER & OCTOBER

PARIS
1 night B&B Fri & Sat.
or 2 nights B&B midweek.
★ ★ Grand Hotel de Paris.
Additional nights £18.

AMSTERDAM
1 night B&B.
★ ★ ★ Amstel Hotel.
Additional nights £28.
Flights from London & Manchester.

PRAGUE
2 nights B&B.
★ ★ ★ Hotel Julian.
Additional nights £26.

BARCELONA
2 nights B&B.
★ ★ ★ Santamaría.
Additional nights £19.

London and regional airport departures available.
Centrally located hotels with ensuite bathrooms.
Exclusive & charming hotel upgrades available.

Telephone for best city break prices to:
Bruges, Budapest, Dublin,
Florence, Istanbul, Lisbon, Madrid,
Nice, Rome, Seville and Venice.

Flight prices do NOT include any airport taxes.
Prices per person based upon two people sharing a room.
ALL OFFERS SUBJECT TO AVAILABILITY.
For reservations phone Mon to Thu 09.00 to 18.00 hrs, Fridays 09.00 - 14.00 hrs.

0171-565 6677
CITYTRAVELLER DIRECT LTD

TIMES TWO CROSSWORD

1	2	3	4	5	6	7
8 9 10 11 12 13
14
15
16
17
18 19 20 21
22
23

No 1187

ACROSS 1 Tribal warrior: recruitment consultant (4-6) 8 Anxious, unsettled (7) 9 Of the Arctic (5) 10 Obligation; a tax (4) 11 Cutting tool (8) 13 Annual (6) 15 Squirm (6) 17 Final (8) 18 Spade's depth: rotisserie (4) 21 Aus. wild dog (5) 22 Causing foreboding (7) 23 Unproven charge (10)	DOWN 2 Choose, chosen (5) 3 Faulty (colloq.); a pudding (4) 4 Release with key (6) 5 Woven wall-hanging (8) 6 Use pin on pastry: launch in stages (4,3) 7 (Eg college) brochure (10) 8 Stick-in-the-mud (5-5) 12 Sort of shoe, of line (8) 14 (Insect's) feeder (7) 16 Powerful (6) 19 Snap; sort of (race) finish (5) 20 Arbitrary decree (4)
--	--

SOLUTION TO NO 1186
ACROSS: 6 Boudoir 7 Amiss 9 Shelf 10 Grapnel 11 In the sticks 14 Hand in glove 17 Immense 19 Baker 21 Kenya 22 Concord
DOWN: 1 Ruse 2 Confetti 3 Brogue 4 Haka 5 Pinnacle 6 Bust 8 Splash 11 Ignominy 12 Trombone 13 Shrink 15 Greece 16 Grid 18 Near 20 Knox

The clue to 60 across in the Times Two August Bank Holiday Crossword should have read: Speculator (8).

PRICES INCLUDE POSTAGE FOR UK ONLY. SEND SAE FOR DETAILS AND PRICES OF THE TIMES ATLAS OR MAIL ORDER CHARGES IN UK.

TIMES CROSSWORDS: Books, £10.95 each. The Times Crossword - Book 1 (240 puzzles) £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 2 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 3 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 4 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 5 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 6 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 7 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 8 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 9 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 10 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 11 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 12 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 13 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 14 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 15 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 16 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 17 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 18 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 19 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 20 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 21 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 22 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 23 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 24 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 25 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 26 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 27 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 28 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 29 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 30 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 31 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 32 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 33 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 34 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 35 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 36 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 37 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 38 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 39 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 40 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 41 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 42 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 43 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 44 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 45 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 46 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 47 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 48 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 49 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 50 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 51 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 52 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 53 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 54 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 55 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 56 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 57 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 58 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 59 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 60 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 61 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 62 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 63 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 64 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 65 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 66 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 67 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 68 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 69 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 70 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 71 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 72 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 73 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 74 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 75 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 76 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 77 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 78 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 79 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 80 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 81 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 82 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 83 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 84 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 85 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 86 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 87 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 88 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 89 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 90 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 91 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 92 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 93 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 94 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 95 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 96 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 97 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 98 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 99 £5.99. The Times Crossword - Book 100 £5.99.